"You shall swear truly to observe and keep, and of your and every of your parts cause to be observed and kept, all the good and lawful rules, ordinances, and constitutions, contained and specified within this your Ordinal, so far forth as in you is, and by the laws of this realm you ought. You shall truly, without partiality, collect and gather up, or cause to be collected and gathered up, all, and every such fine, pains, penalties, forfeitures, and sums of money whatsoever, that shall be forfeited, payable, or due, by any of you, or any of your Occupation, or by any other person or persons whatsoever, by reason or force of this your Ordinal; and thereof shall, at the end of your year, make and yield up, in writing, a just and true account to all the rest of your said Occupation, or to the most part of them that shall to that purpose assemble together: and shall also, truly, without fraud or delay, yearly, and at the end of your year, or at the furthest within one month before the Chamberlains of the said Borough of Leicester shall make their accounts, pay or cause to be paid to the said chamberlains of the town, and to the use of the town, the just moiety or one half of all the said fines, pains, penalties, forfeitures, and sums of money, as shall come to your hands by force of the said office. These and all other things belonging to your said office and offices, you and every of you shall well and truly perform, to the best of your power and skill. So help you God."

The Oath of the Well Reeves.

"A. B. and A. D. You shall faithfully and diligently execute the office of a Well Reeve of your said ward for the year ensuing, and cause the said wells to be kept in good and sufficient repair, for the benefit of the neighbourhood, and service and use of the Corporation; and shall do and execute all other things belonging to your said office, so long as you or either of you shall continue in the same, truly and justly, according to the best of your powers, knowledge, and abilities. So help you God."

The Oath of a Pinder.

"You shall swear that you will well and truly execute the office of a Pinder, or Hayward, within the South Fields of Leicester, and the liberties thereof; and you shall present all pound breaches that shall be made within the same, and all waifs and strays you shall take, and be answerable for the same; and all other things belonging to your said office you shall do and perform, to the best of your power, knowledge, skill, and ability. So help you God."

The Oath of such Butchers as are free for Market-days only.

"You shall swear you will well and truly keep and observe all and every the particulars expressed in the 7th and 8th branches of the Butchers' Ordinal of this Borough, and do and perform all other matters and things as in any sort concern the good orders and rules of the said trade, to the best of your knowledge, skill, and ability. So help you God."

The Oath of the Country Bakers.

"You shall swear you shall well and truly observe and keep all and every thing contained in the three branches in the Bakers' Ordinal, and which concerns the Bakers of the Country; and do and perform all other matters and things as in any sort concern the good orders and rules of the said trade, so far forth as concerns you, to the best of your knowledge, skill, and ability. So help you God."

By indenture, May 26, 12 Charles II. his Majesty's Attorney General of the Duchy of Lancaster sold to the Mayor, &c. of the Borough of Leicester, the Mill under the Castle of Leicester, with the holmes adjoining; the fishing of the Soar, from a place called Morehead unto the North Mill, and the appurtenances thereunto belonging, reserving an annual rent to the King of 17*l.* for 610*l.*

It appears, by the Corporation accounts, that, on the Restoration, they expended, at the proclaiming Charles the Second King, whose father's arms had been torn from the walls of churches in Leicester with the most indignant fury, and whose memory they had branded with the vilest epithets, 11*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*; and on the day of general thanksgiving for his Majesty's happy Restoration to the Crown of his ancestors, which they acknowledged had been despoiled by lawless tyranny, 9*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* They, who had been the foremost to rob him of his dignity, and lay his sceptre at the feet of usurpers, now presented him with 300*l.*; and expended 19*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.* to procure the sum in gold. Three aldermen and the two chamberlains, who went to present it to his Majesty, were accompanied by their serjeants at mace, with their shining emblems of office, attired at the expence of 45*l.*; on which occasion they expended 17*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.*

"In this year, there was a double return of members to serve in Parliament for this Borough. Those returned were, John Grey, of London, esq. and William Hartopp, of Rotherby, esq.; and sir John Pretyman and sir William Hartopp, knights."

The preceding article is from the MS Collections of Mr. Carte; who has preserved some interesting particulars relative to this subject.

"In several Hall-books I have met with the following account of members chosen for the town.

17 Edw. IV. Jan. 12. There were elected Peers Curtes by the commons, and John Wigson by the mayor and his brethren. The Parliament began the 17th of January, and was dissolved the 25th of February following.

22 Edw. IV. On Friday before the Epiphany were elected Peers Curtes, mayor, by the commons, and John Roberts by the mayor's brethren.

1 Ric. III. Jan. 12. Elected John Roberts, mayor, by the mayor's brethren, and Peers Curtes by the commonalty. The Parliament began Jan. 13.

4 Hen. VII. Dec. 22. Elected Peter Curteys and Roger Wigson. The Parliament began Jan. 13.

7 Hen. VII. Aug. 23. Elected Peter Curteys by the commons, and Robert Croft by the mayor and his brethren. The Parliament began Oct. 17.

19 Hen VII. die Jovis prox' ante festum Nativitatis Domini. Elected Robert Orton by the commons, and William Wygston junior by the mayor and his brethren.

14 Hen. VIII. On Tuesday before the Annunciation elected William Bolte, mayor, by the commons, and Roger Wygston by the mayor's brethren.

"I have met with no more elections of Parliament men till 1 Mary.

"As to the electors, observe, 1. That the government of the town being antiently lodged in 24 persons, styled 'The mayor and his brethren,' these separately made choice of one of the members of Parliament, and the commonalty of the town chose the other. This distinct choice lasted a good while in King Henry the Eighth's reign; but I cannot tell the precise time when they began to choose jointly. 2. That the commons concerned in the election of their members were all the inhabitants of the town, whether freemen or others, till 4 Hen. VII. when the King, by the advice of his counsel of the Dutchy, to prevent the disorders which frequently happened in the election of mayor, burgesses of parliament, and making assessments, ordered the mayor and 24 comburgesses to call unto them only 48, whom they should judge to be the wisest and gravest of the commonalty, upon these occasions. And at the next election of annual officers, Sept. 21, 5 Hen. VII. the commons at large insisting upon their antient privilege in a tumultuous manner, the King in Parliament that year ordained, that the mayor and his brethren should, from time to time, choose 48 of the most discreet inhabitants of the town, who, with the mayor and his brethren, or more part of them, should make yearly election of all the mayors and other officers of the said borough, and their election should be good, &c.

"N. B. The election of Parliament-men is not expressly mentioned in this act: nevertheless all elections of them were, in fact, made agreeable to the tenor of it till the Restoration of King Charles II. when sir John Pretyman made interest with the Commons at large; and, upon a hearing in the House of Commons, was admitted to be duly elected in virtue of their votes.

"The right of election is vested in the freemen at large, not receiving alms, and in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, not being persons certificated from other places. The number of electors is now (1712) supposed to be about 2000. [The electors for the county are about 5000.]

"As to the persons elected, it is observable, that of old they were always inhabitants and members of the Borough; the first instance which I have met of any country gentleman's election being in the first Parliament of Queen Mary, when William Faunt and Thomas Farnham, esqrs. were chosen.

"When such as were not freemen purposed to stand as candidates to be chosen members of Parliament, they commonly purchased their freedom before-hand to qualify themselves. So at least sir Henry Beaumont, of Gracedieu, and sir William Skipwith, knts. that were chosen 1 Jac. I. paid 6*l.* each for their freedom."

Aug. 7, 1660. Richard Parsons, gaoler for the Borough, was agreed to be admitted a serjeant at mace, in place of John Tyrlington, who is hereby discharged.

The following letter, dated Leicester, 4 September, 1660, was addressed to Henry earl of Huntingdon:

"Right Honorable, The lowe condition of this Corporation of Leicester wee presume your Lordshipp may have heard of; yet it is our great desire to expresse our duty unto our most gracious Kinge to the utmost wee can, and in all things to signifye our loyalty to his sacred Majestie; which wee hope our Recorder will declare on our behalfe; who, with some others of this Corporation, are appointed to deliver unto his Majestie a present of 300*l.* value, with a surrender of a fee-farme rent of 17*l.* per annum; which was heretofore purchased by the Corporation, beinge issueing out of their own lands.. It is now our humble suite to your Lordshipp, you will favour this Corporation soe much as to vouchsafe your Lordshipp's presence att the deliveringe of this present, and to gaine it and us a good acceptance with his Majestie, which wee know well may bee done by your Lordship's favour, and may bee as well accepted as greater presents from greater and richer Corporations. Wee have great hope, and are well assured, that your Lordshipp will not onely graunt us this suite; but also that your Lordshipp will continue those favours which your ancestors have always borne to this Corporation. Wee humbly begg your Lordshipp's pardon for this great boldnes; and shall ever remain your Lordshipp's humble servants,

John Clay, mayor.
William Stanley.

September 1660, 12 Car. II. Daniel Abney major. Ballivus, Willielmus Major. Freemen, 45.

[Now they begin to use Latin again in their titles.]

Oct. 24. At a meeting of the mayor and aldermen, agreed that Mr. Edward Palmer, town-clerk, shall be clerk of the statutes for this Borough, he giving security to save the town harmless. He was sworn Jan. 7; and the seal was delivered to him.

Sept. 1661, 13 Car. II. Francis Noble mayor. Freemen, 20.—N. B. James Winstanley was recorder Sept. 21.

A Mr. Wood received 2*s*. being the arrears of rent for the Butt-close, the price of two broad arrows.

Sept. 12, 1662. At a meeting of the mayor and his brethren, Robert Harding, esq. is chosen recorder (and was sworn a freeman), upon surrender of James Winstanley, late recorder.

Sept. 1662, 14 Car. II. Daniel Deakin mayor. Freemen, 17. A fire at Grantham happened in his time. Towards the sufferers' loss, the Corporation contributed 10*l*.

1663, Thomas Blunt and Richard Palmer mayors. Freemen, 34.

Walter Hood, a stranger, made free July 1, 1664. His fine 20*l*. [Note; he was the first that paid so much.] John Pares, Sept. 28, paid 15*l*.

Sept. 1664, William Callis mayor. Freemen, 16.

N. B. Edward Palmer subscribes as town-clerk to last year; but now, Johannes Huckle com'is clericus.

James Duke of York, Lord High Admiral of England, and brother to the King, was entertained at Leicester by the Body Corporate, at the expence of 16*l*. 3*s*. 10*d*.—"Paid to the Duke of York's trumpeters, pages, coachmen, &c. 4*l*. 15*s*."

William Callis was an apothecary, who was honoured with this Princely visit.

In this year Charles II. granted a new charter to Leicester, ratifying and confirming those of his predecessors. This varies but little from those before recited. The preamble, as usual, sets forth, that "the borough of Leicester being an antient borough, &c." which had many antient privileges, grants, immunities, and prescriptions, from Kings, and other noble personages, prior to its being incorporated; it says, therefore, "We, for the better governing of that town, do grant, ratify, and confirm, all former acts of our progenitors that they, the inhabitants of that place, may enjoy quot, quanta, qualia, as they had done under the letters patent of our predecessor Edward the Fourth, under the great seal of England, or likewise what they had under Queen Elizabeth, &c. &c." In strong terms, it requires all officers acting in this Corporate Body to take the oath of supremacy. But hear the charter:

"Rex omnibus ad quos, &c. salutem. Some heavy fines were laid upon two inhabitants for refusing to serve on the company of forty-eight. One was Mr. Edward Billars, and the other Mr. William Warburton, who paid each 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* as a fine of 100 marks, imposed (as it is called) for the contempt of not serving on the forty-eight.

Sept. 1666, 18 Car. II. Edmund Townsend mayor. Freemen, 23.

The terrible fire that happened at Loughborough [2] Oct. 5, 1666, called forth an unusual sum for accidents of that sort. "Paid, towards their present relief, 15*l.*" What they contributed afterwards does not appear.

"Paid, for the repairs of Bow bridge, 15*l.* 12*s.*"

At the same time St. Austin's well was repaired, at the expence of 2*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*

A tax also was paid for the "town lands" to the royal aid, 72*l.* 13*s.*

At a common hall, Oct. 8. Whereas Henry Dyson, gent. did, upon Sunday last, being Oct. 6, stop Mr. Mayor, as he was going to his parish church of St. Mary in Leicester, and caused the serjeants and mace-bearer (after an unusual manner) to stoop their maces, and also when they came to the church-door; and would not suffer the great mace to be set up in the case where it usually did hang: It is ordered, that, if Mr. Dyson shall ever hereafter offer the like affront, Mr. Mayor shall consult with persons learned in the law, in what manner the town may proceed to vindicate their antient rights and privileges.

Ordered, that Mr. Wakeman, head-schoolmaster of the free school, on condition that he voluntarily resign the place of head-schoolmaster, shall have given him, by the Corporation, 45*l.*

Nov. 12. At a meeting of Mr. Mayor and his brethren, it is ordered: In regard a damnable plot has been carried on by the Papists, a watch be appointed nightly; the aldermen taking it in their turns, and likewise a constable, every night, and two of the forty-eight.

Jan. 3. At a common hall, Mr. William Thomas is elected head-schoolmaster of the free school in this Borough.

1679, John Roberts mayor. Sir Robert Harding recorder.

March 12. The parish of St. Mary petitioning this Hall to grant them some money, towards payment of 20*l.* to Mrs. Lacy, who hath offered to settle upon the vicars of St. Mary's, for ever, the house late in occupation of Mr. Joseph Bond, vicar of the said parish: It is ordered, that the said parishioners shall have 5*l.* paid them, out of the chamber of the town, to the said use.

At the request, and by the complaints, of the common council and freemen of the Borough, a law was enacted, in August 1680, in conformity and confirmation of one made in the reign of James I. that if any person, being a non-freeman of the borough, "shall at any time exercise any trade, mystery, occupation, or craft, within the liberties or precincts thereof, contrary to the antient usage and customs of the said Borough, he shall, for every offence, forfeit the sum of 20*s.* to the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, to be recovered by action of debt, bill, or plaint, in any of His Majesty's Courts of Record, to be levied by distress of the goods of the offenders."—Mem. This law was exhibited to sir Thomas Raymond, knight, and sir Thomas Street, knight, justices of assize; and fully approved by them, and allowed. In witness whereof, the said justices thereto set their hands and seals, in the presence of two witnesses.

Sept. 9, 1680. At a meeting of the mayor and commissioners, it is ordered, that the present owner or occupier of the vicarage-house belonging to the parish of St. Martin shall pay, yearly, for a chamber they now hold, which is part of the Town-hall, and is now used with the said vicarage-house, the sum of 2*s.* 6*d.* during the pleasure of the Corporation.

1680, 32 Car. II. John Goodhall mayor. Nathan Wrighte, arm', recorder.

Nov. 26. At a meeting of the twenty-four, it is ordered, that all the aldermen that have been or shall be mayors shall attend Mr. Mayor for the time being in their scarlet gowns to wait on the judge at every assize; and the justices of peace of the Borough to sit with the judges and Mr. Mayor, upon delivering the gaol, in their scarlet gowns.

It is also ordered, that for the future all elections of members to be chosen of either company shall be elected by tickets only.

May 30, 1681. At a common hall, it is ordered that an engine be bought, for the use of the Corporation in case of fire, with the monies subscribed by the several persons of both companies, and what else shall be collected and subscribed by the inhabitants.

Aug. 16. At a meeting of the twenty-four, Mr. William Brown is chosen solicitor for the Corporation during pleasure.

Sept. 7. At a common hall, it is ordered, that if any freeman of this borough be disturbed in paying toll in any place where they ought not to pay, by virtue of the patents granted to the Corporation, such person bringing his action, &c. and be put to charges to try the right of the Corporation, shall be repaid by the Corporation out of the chamber of the town.

1681, George Bent mayor.

Whit-Monday, 1682, 34 Car. II. At a common hall. Whereas several members were appointed to view the six widows almswomens' houses of the college of St. John the Baptist, within the said

[1] This man was exceedingly unpopular in his time; on whom the following lines were written, which I have heard from the mouths of some old people even at this distant day:

> "Dean, Dean, and double Dean, the child that is to bear,
> May curse the time that ever Dean was mayor;
> For cutting of the strike, and selling the town land,
> And putting the money into squinting Pollard's hand."

Pollard, I have been told, was a chamberlain, and ran away with the money which had been received for the sale of some Corporation property. One house sold was "a tenement in Holy Rood lane," now Town Hall lane.

[2] Great murmurings prevailed in Leicester in his time, among the freemen of the borough, against the farmers who rented the land in St. Mary's field. Throsby.—See vol. IV. p. 347.

[3] A little article occurs in his year for mending St. Anthony's bridge in Sanvey gate. One that stood there, I apprehend, before the Town-ditch was filled up. Throsby.

Borough, &c. the said members conceive it more fit the said six poor widows be removed up into the chamber, there being more conveniences for them than the houses they now dwell in can be made to have, without very great charge: It is therefore ordered, that the little rooms in the said chamber be speedily made fit for them to be removed up thereunto.

1683, 35 Car. II. Andrew Freeman mayor.

Nov. 23. Ordered, that the under-stewards of fairs shall, in their own persons, without deputing any other person, collect the moneys due from all persons standing in the fairs, &c. for the use of the chamber of the town, upon penalty of 13*s*. 4*d*. for every neglect, for the use of the chamber of the Corporation, &c.

Jan. 15. At a meeting of the twenty-four, John Major, esq. barrister at law, is chosen steward at the Court of Record, in the place of Thomas Staveley, esq. lately deceased.

March 26, 1684. At a meeting of the twenty-four, Daniel Keene, M. A. late of Jesus college in Cambridge, is chosen head-usher of the school, to be placed therein at or before Whitsuntide next, and therein to continue during pleasure, &c.

Sept. 25. At a common hall, it is agreed that the charters and liberties shall be surrendered unto his gracious Majesty.

These accounts occur respecting the charter:

"Paid charges to Mr. Mayor and aldermen to London, to renew the charter, 20*l*.

"Paid Mr. Brown, town solicitor, his charges about the charter, 180*l*."

1684, 36 Car. II. Thomas Ludlam mayor[1].

JAMES II.

Feb. 6, 1684, King Charles II. died; and King James was proclaimed here, Feb. 14, by the high sheriff and Corporation, attending in their formalities.

King James's speech to the Parliament May 22, 1685, and on Argyle's landing; and, May 30, upon settling his revenue, are entered in the Town Books.

June 12, 1685, 1 Jac. II. At a common hall (the charter being surrendered), it is ordered, that every member of both companies shall come to all meetings appointed by Mr. Mayor, at the Town-hall or elsewhere, in decent gowns and habits, their apparel being either black, or near thereunto, upon pain of forty shillings, to be levied upon every one offending.

It is also agreed, that if any person neglect to appear upon summons, or on days appointed to meet without summons, and cannot shew just cause of absence to Mr. Mayor and his brethren, he shall forfeit, if an alderman, 2*s*.; and a common-council-man, 1*s*. And if any do not appear at any meeting of commissioners appointed by Mr. Mayor (without his leave), he shall forfeit, if an alderman, 2*s*. 6*d*.; if a common-council-man, 1*s*. 6*d*.

It is also agreed, that every one neglecting to appear in his gown, at the Town-hall or elsewhere, as Mr. Mayor appoints, shall forfeit, if an alderman, 4*s*.; and a common-council-man, 2*s*. 6*d*.

21 and 22 June, 1685, the mayor, &c. in consideration of 130*l*. sold unto Lawrence Carter, gent. the Mill, &c. and several fishings of the Soar, from a place called Morehead unto a certain bridge called West-bridge, lying over the said river; paying yearly to the King, for the said premises, the reserved rent of 17*l*. per annum.

And the mayor, &c. as far as by law they be enabled, grant to the said Lawrence Carter free leave and liberty, at his own expence, not only to make cisterns within the High Cross, in the Borough of Leicester, for the holding and furnishing with water such pipes as he shall lay down in the said Borough, Bishop's Fee, Newark and Castle of Leicester, or in any of them.

1685, Walter Hood mayor. Theophilus comes Huntingdon, recordator. Nathan Wrighte, deput' record'. [N. B. The chamberlains are here styled ballivi.]

Whit-Monday 1686, 2 Jac. II. At a common hall, it is agreed that there shall be a scavenger appointed for carrying dirt swept up from the doors of the inhabitants of this Borough; and to agree with him is left to all the senior aldermen, or major part of them.

1686, 2 Jac. II. Francis Ward mayor.

1687, 3 Jac. II. Joseph Cradock mayor. Iidem recordator & deput' record'.

March 13, 1687, 4 Jac. II. At a meeting of the mayor and aldermen [there were chosen 11 aldermen and 16 common-council-men also]. Mr. John Oneby bailiff, Mr. John Creswell town-clerk, Mr. Vollentine House town-solicitor.

1688, 4 Jac. II. William Bentley mayor. Iidem recordator & deput' record'.

James II. issued a proclamation for restoring antient charters, liberties, rights, and franchises, when he was threatened with an invasion. In consequence all that had been surrendered (which were many) were restored; "putting them (it says) in the same condition, state, and plight, they were in at the time of such deeds of surrender."

Mr. Major was bailiff at the surrender; but refused to re-assume his office when it was restored.

"A Proclamation for restoreing Corporations to their antient Charters, Liberties, Rights, and Franchises.

"Whereas wee are informed that severall deeds of surrender, which have been lately made, by severall corporations and bodyes corporate of and in our cityes and townes, within our kingdome of England and dominion of Wales, of their charters, franchises, and priviledges, are not yet recorded or enrolled; and that upon the proceedings and rules for judgement which have been lately had upon the Quo Warrantos, or informations in nature of a Quo Warranto, judgements are not yet entered upon record; whereupon notwithstanding new charters have been granted in the reigne of our late deare Brother, and in our reigne; which said deeds, being not enrolled or recorded, do not amount unto, or in law make, any surrender of the charters, franchises, or liberties, therein mentioned; and such of the said corporations or bodyes politique, against which rules for judgements have been made, in the life-time of our late deare Brother or since, in our Court of King's Bench, but no judgements entered upon record, are not discorporate or dissolved; and that it is in our power to leave such corporation in the same estate and condition they were in, and to discharge all further proceedings and effects that may be of such rules for judgements and deeds of surrender: We doe hereby publish and declare, that upon due search and examination made, we have satisfaction that the deeds of surrender made by the corporations and bodyes politique of the said cities and townes, except the corporations following: that is to say, Thetford, Nottingham, Bridgwater, Ludlow, Bewdley, Beverley, Tewkesbury, Exeter, Doncaster, Colchester, Winchester, Launceston, Liskerd, Plimpton, Tregoney, Plymouth, Dunwich, St. Ives, Fowey, East Looe, Camelford, West Looe, Tintegall, Penryn, Truro, Bodmyn, Hadleigh, Lestwythell, and Saltash, are not inrolled or recorded in any of our courts; and that though rules for judgements have passed, upon informations in nature of a Quo Warrrnto, against the corporations and bodies politique of several cities and townes in our said kingdome and dominion, yet no judgements have been or are entered upon record upon any such informations, except against the cities of London, Chester, Calne, St. Ives, Pool, York, Thaxted, Llanghour, and Malmesbury. And wee, of our meere grace and favour, being resolved to restore and put all our cities, townes, and burroughs, in England and Wales, and also our town of Berwick upon Tweed, into the same state and condition they were and was in our late deare Brother's reigne, before any deed of surrender was made of their charters or franchises, or proceedings against them, or the corporations or bodies politique in or of the said cities, townes, or burroughes, upon any Quo Warrantos, or informations in nature of a Quo Warranto, had; wee do hereby therefore publish, declare, direct, and require, that the said corporations and bodies politique and corporate of all the said cities, townes, and burroughs, whose deeds of surrender are not inrolled, nor judgements entered against them as aforesaid, and the mayors, bailiffs, sheriffs, aldermen, common-councilmen, assistants, recorders, town-clerks, magistrates, ministers, officers, freemen, and all and every others the members of or in every of them respectively, upon the publication of this our proclamation, take on them and proceed to act as a corporation or body politique; and where places are vacant by death or otherwise, to make elections, constitute and fill up the same, notwithstanding the usual dayes and times of elections by the antient charters and constitutions shall happen to be past; and to doe, execute, and perform, all and every matter and thing as they lawfully might and ought to have done, if noe such deeds of surrender, rules for judgement, or other proceedings, upon any such Quo Warrantos or informations, had been had or made: And, for the better effecting our said intention, we have, by order made by us in council, and under our sign manual, and we do alsoe by this our proclamation, made with the advice of our said council, discharge, remove, and dismiss, all and every person and persons of and from all offices and places of mayors, bailiffs, sheriffs, aldermen, common-council-men, assistants, recorder, towne-clerk, and all and every office and place which they or any of them have or clayme only by charter, patent, or grant, from our deare Brother, or from ourself, since the dates of the respective deeds of surrender or rules for judgement, except such corporations whose deeds of surrender are inrolled, or against whom judgement is entered; and that all and every such person and persons deliver up into the hands and custody of the said persons hereby appoynted and intended to act and execute the said offices and places, all and every the charters, records, bookes, evidences, and matters, concerning the said respective corporations: And wee do hereby further publish and declare, that wee have caused all and every the said deeds of surrender which can be found to be delivered and put into the hands of our Attorney Generall, to be by him cancelled, and returned to the corporations and bodies politique of the respective cities and townes whom they concern; and have also given to our said Attorney authority, and do hereby warrant and command him, not only not to proceed or enter judgement upon the said Quo Warrantos, or informations in nature of a Quo Warranto, or any of them, but to enter upon the respective records Noli Prosequi's and legall discharges thereof: And wee doe hereby publish and declare our further grace and favour to the said cities, corporations, and burroughs, at any time hereafter, by any further act, to grant, confirm, or restore unto them, all their charters, liberties, franchises, and priviledges, that, at the respective times of such deeds of surrender or rules for judgement made or given, they held or enjoyed; and in order to the perfecting our said gracious intentions, wee doe hereby likewise publish and declare our royal will and pleasure, as for and concerning the restoring to

[1] "On the credit of my aged mother (who was born in the first year of the eighteenth century, and died in 1797, at the advanced age of 97), I give the following: A Mrs. Dickman, going from St. Margaret's church, was blown from the foot causeway into the Town-ditch in Church-gate; and another lady was saved from being blown over the West bridge into the river by two men: hoops were in general use at that time. She informed me further, that the leads on some of the churches were torn up; and that many of the people left the churches in the middle of divine service, expecting every minute the destruction of the steeples." Throsby.—In vol. IV. p. 104, Mr. Macaulay applies the epithet of Bird's wind to the storm of 1703.

Oct. 10. The hall ordered, that Mr. John Abney shall have yearly 10*l.* paid him for preaching at St. Nicholas, to commence from Michaelmas last.

Ordered, that when and as often as any framework-knitters, inhabiting within this Corporation, being freemen, are sued by the company of framework-knitters of London, upon account of their binding or making free any apprentice before the Mayor, the Corporation, at their charge, shall defend the said prosecution; and that Mr. Noble, the solicitor, defend the action now brought against Thomas Derbyshire and William Brown, freemen of this Borough, and framework-knitters; and if the company of framework-knitters, London, shall not prosecute their action so as to bring the same to trial, Mr. Noble to bring actions for the recovery of the costs. And the said Derbyshire and Brown shall give 100*l.* bond not to agree with the company of London in any manner relating to the said actions, without consent of the Corporation. And all persons sued are to do the same.

Nov. 22. The hall ordered, that his grace the duke of Rutland, lord lieutenant of this county, shall be met by the whole company, in their formalities, in the Belgrave gate, and wait upon him to his inn.

Feb. 6, 1715-16. The hall chose flesh-tasters, sealers of leather, and of hides and tallow, fish-tasters, and ale-tasters; and ordered, that the auditors and these officers, for the future, shall be appointed the first hall after the mayor's feast.

April 16, 1716. The commissioners set to Samuel Blocksome, gardener, a cottage or tenement in Senvey gate, late in possession of widow Dennis, for seven years, from Lady-day last, for 15*s.* per annum. He to put and keep it in repair; and pay taxes, except the King's.

April 27. The hall ordered, that the shoemakers' shops be taken down, and set upon brick pillars.

The same day, the commissioners ordered that John Davenport, of Bushby, have a lease for 21 years of the land there, under the same rents and covenants as in his former lease.

May 7. The commissioners set to Robert Lord the sheep-penns, and places used for that purpose, for seven years, if he so long lived, from Feb. 2 last, under the rent of 17*l.* per annum, payable half-yearly; and also a place called Coker's kitchen, under the same rent, in consideration of his repairing it, and leaving it so. They also set to Mr. Richard Townesend the house and close in the horse-fair called Stanley's house and close, from Lady-day next, for 21 years, he paying 12*l.* per annum, and all taxes and dues, except the King's tax; and not to plough or dig the close, or let the same, without consent of the Corporation; and to put the house, and leave it, in good repair. And what buildings he erects he may take away, or satisfaction is to be made him by the Corporation.

May 25. The hall ordered, that the chamberlains for the time being take care to have the two engines played once a quarter, on pain of 20*s.* a quarter; and that they employ such persons as they see convenient, whereof the beadle and cryer to be two; and to pay such persons 5*s.* for their trouble every quarter or time when they are played. The first time to be within two days before or after Midsummer next, and so two days before or after each other quarter-day.

July 23. The hall ordered, that the new sheds to be built be arched.

Samuel Blocksome was released from his agreement for the house in Senvey gate.

Ordered, that no chamberlains' account shall for the future be passed without receipts on the bills, and the money actually paid.

Ordered, that no taxes shall be allowed to any person without they bring a receipt for the same.

Sept. 17. At a hall, several leases of the new shops were sealed.

Sept. 21, William Goadby elected mayor; Augustin Heafford, Thomas Orme, chamberlains.

Oct. 12. The hall ordered a bond to be given to the executors of Mr. Thomas Ayre, deceased, for the 20*l.* left by his will to St. John's Hospital, which was sealed Oct. 19.

Oct. 19. The hall ordered the aldermen who have wards each to take his constable, and on Wednesday next view the several streets, lanes, and causeways, in their several wards, that are out of repair; and enquire which of them are to be repaired by the Corporation, and which by other people.

Nov. 7. The hall gave alderman Johnson liberty to assign his lease of his farm in St. Mary's field to his brother Joseph Johnson.

Nov. 7. The commissioners set to John Dawson a cottage in Senvey gate for one year from St. Thomas next; he to pay 4*l.* and all taxes except the King's.

Feb. 1, 1716-17. At a hall: Upon the dispute of repairing the pavement against the Parrot under Mr. Noble's garden-wall, it is agreed, that the Corporation shall repair that part, provided Mr. Noble repair at the same time the pavement from thence to the end of the Friers; and that the pavement, so far as the Corporation agrees to repair, be measured.

Feb. 15. It is the opinion of this hall, that the narrow pavement from the Corn-wall by the pillory to the grand pavement towards the Saracen's head doth belong to the Corporation; and resolved, that the sheep-pens taken from that pavement to the Dolphin-house be set down again, that the Corporation may have the benefit thereof as heretofore.

March 1. The commissioners resolved, that whatever stalls in the middle pavement are taken, none shall be tilted. Also, that every stall that is six feet long shall pay 10*s.* and every stall that is more than six feet shall pay 2*s.* 6*d.* the foot above the 10*s.* per annum.

Item, resolved that the standings under the new buildings against the Corn-wall, from pillar to pillar, be marked N° 8, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9; and that the standing under one building to be marked N° 1, and the standing to be marked N° 9, be let at 20*s.* per annum; and the other standings, from pillar to pillar, under each building, be let at 15*s.* per annum.

Richard Griffin took the shop marked N° 14 at the same rate as John Stubbs had the same, for the remainder of his term.

Augustin Heafford took the sheep-pens, and places used for that purpose, with the place called Coker's kitchen, from Candlemas last, for 21 years, under the rent of 20*l.* per annum, payable at two equal payments.

March 27, 1716-17. The commissioners set to Thomas Ayre, gent. the close garden or orchard lying in All Saints parish, from Lady-day last, for 21 years, at the rent of 6*l.* 10*s.* to be paid at two equal payments; and he to pay all taxes, and repair the fences, and to leave at the said term as many growing fruit-trees as are now in the said orchard.

May 27. Ordered, that the tenant of Allexton land have a new lease for 21 years, from the expiration of the former, on the same terms and covenants.

July 29. The hall ordered 5*l.* for relief of the poor sufferers by fire at Oundle.

Ordered, that the four serjeants at mace be paid 15*s.* apiece every quarter for their salary during pleasure, instead of the salary which they now have; they providing themselves good and handsome apparel of cloth black, or near that colour; the first payment to be at Michaelmas next.

Aug. 9. Two leases, one of Stanley's lands to Mr. Townesend, and the other of an orchard in All Saints parish to Mr. Thomas Ayre, for 21 years from Lady-day last, sealed.

Sept. 16. The commissioners set to John Billers, tobacconist, the shop under the Gainsborough which Jonas Davy of Mountsorell had, at the same rate.

Sept. 21, Thomas Helmesley elected mayor; Richard Roberts, Robert Reynolds, chamberlains.

Sept. 27. The hall ordered, that Mr. Adcock, under-usher of the school, shall live in the new house in Senvey gate during pleasure, paying yearly 1*s.*; he is to put it in repair, and keep it so, and pay all taxes.

The commissioners the same day set to Augustin

Heaford, carpenter, the stable in Saturday market, late John Ducket's (the lease to expire at the same time as his lease for the sheep-penns), at the rent of 25*s. per annum.* He is to keep it in repair, and pay all taxes except the King's.

Oct. 11. The hall ordered the chamberlains, with aldermen of wards, with some others, to view all the streets and pavements; and report, in writing, to the next hall, what are to be repaired by the Corporation, together with dimension, and how bounden. This order was renewed Nov. 25.

Nov. 25. At a hall, sealed a bond for sir Thomas White's 423*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*

Dec. 13. The commissioners set to Thomas Hall, innholder, the close called the Forest close, now in lease to Mr. George Bent, from Lady-day next for 21 years, at the rent of 18*l.* for the first year, and 19*l.* afterwards, to be paid March 25 yearly; the first payment to be at his entering.

Dec. 20. The aldermen ordered, that the 50*l.* of sir Thomas White's charity now to be disposed of be disposed by balloting and petition.

Feb. 14, 1717-18. The order of April 5, 1715, relating to Dr. Hartop's building his house on Cornwall, is by this hall declared void. Mr. Sutton (mace-bearer) was allowed 2*s.* 6*d. per* week during his illness.

Feb. 14. The commissioners ordered, that Mr. John Watts, or such person as the lord lieutenant or his deputies shall appoint, shall have a lease of that which adjoins to the Magazine which belongs to this Corporation, for 21 years from Michaelmas last, for 40*s. per annum*, paying all arrears from the death of Mr. Mawson till last Michaelmas, after the rent of 20*s. per annum*, and to pay all taxes, and leave all in repair at the end of the term.

April 9, 1718. The commissioners ordered that Mr. Robert Lord have liberty to build on the town ground that part of his house called the Wheat-sheaf, on the Corn-wall side, even with Dr. Hartop's house, and not exceeding four feet and a half at the end next Mrs. Woodland's; and that he have a lease of it for 500 years, at 20*s. per annum.*

The court of aldermen chose John Armston to be keeper of the Bridewell, in room of John Brooks deceased. They also chose Ebenezer Beasley to be mace-bearer, in room of Edward Sutton deceased.

Also ordered, that for the future, for every 10*l.* bond, the town-clerk shall take but 7*s.* 6*d.* and 6*d.* for the mace-bearer; and for every 50*l.* bond 9*s.* and 1*s.* for the mace-bearer; and so the same for renewing.

June 2. The hall ordered workmen to repair the town gaol.

Sept. 5. The hall ordered, that for the future, at the hunting feast, which is yearly on Easter Monday, the twenty-four, in their formalities, attend Mr. Mayor into the field, if the weather permit, according to the antient custom; and what entertainment shall be given that day shall be at the charge of the mayor only, upon forfeiture of 20*l.* the late additional salary.

Ordered also, that when sir Thomas White's and Mr. Heyrick's bonds are turned over, according to order of hall, what money or bonds shall be in the late mayor's hands, such money or bonds shall be immediately paid to the present mayor, upon forfeiture of 20*l.* by the late mayor.

Sept. 21, Charles Tuffley elected mayor; Henry Smith, John Payne, chamberlains.

Sept. 26. The hall ordered, that such persons as shall hereafter come before the mayor to bind any apprentice, he shall be obliged to come to the town court, and there make oath, that such apprentice is to be an actual menial servant, for the term of seven years, to the trade or occupation mentioned in the indenture, before such apprentice shall be bound. And that every person that shall hereafter claim his freedom, he shall first acquaint Mr. Mayor with his claim; and Mr. Mayor, at the next hall, acquaint the members therewith, to the intent that no person shall have his freedom but such as are legally entitled to the same; and if any Mayor shall act contrary to this order, he shall forfeit 20*l.*

Whereas Mr. Thomas Lambert, one of the aldermen, had reflected on Mr. Mayor and the court of aldermen, upon dismissing some late members from the forty-eight; upon his submission, he was forgiven his offence, by a court of aldermen, this day.

Oct. 13. The hall repealed the order, made September 26, about binding apprentices, and making freemen.

Jan. 21, 1718-19. Mr. Southwell had liberty to assign his lease of four yard-land to Mr. Thomas Willows for the remainder of his term.

"In March, on a Thursday night, about eight o'clock, there was seen a meteor in the air, which appeared like a ball of fire, and seemed to fall to the earth, being very surprising to all that saw it[1]."

May 27, 1719. The hall ordered, that Mr. Hartop have a lease of the ground he has built on, belonging to the town, on the Corn-wall, for 21 years, at the yearly rent of 5*s.*

Aug. 3. The balance of the late chamberlain's accounts was 292*l.* 5*s.* 10¼*d.*

Sept. 21, John Ludlam elected mayor; Samuel Simpson, Edward Hawkins, chamberlains.

Nov. 16. The hall ordered Mr. Henley[2], of Melton, shall have such books out of the Library as he has occasion for; Mr. Mayor taking a note for the returning the same.

Jan. 13, 1719-20. It is the opinion of this hall, that the pavement without the East gate, against Mr. Hood's door and William Wright's door, which is out of repair, ought to be repaired by them.

Sept. 21, 1720, Robert Winfield being elected mayor, was found dying, and Edward Hood succeeded; John Earp, Gabriel Newton, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1721, William Hammond elected mayor; Edward Noon, George Bent, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1722, Humphrey Chapman elected mayor; William Lewin, Joseph Bunney, chamberlains.

Paid to sufferers by fire at Wellingborough 15*l.*

"A ball
at the Castle in Leicester, on the 28th day of November 1722, Thomas Hodgson master.
No admittance after four o'clock."

Sept. 21, 1723, Thomas Ayre elected mayor; Henry Payne, Richard Goodhall, chamberlains.

June 12, 1724, at 2 p. m. an awful cloud, charged with lightning and incessant thunder, discharged itself over Leicester, to the great terror of the inhabitants, who expected nothing less than the final dissolution of all things. It was as dark between the flashes of lightning as night—birds, beast, and man, were equally terrified. The hail-stones, which fell in amazing quantities, measured some of them six inches round; and lay in great quantities five hours after the storm. The ripening fruits of the earth were mostly destroyed.

Paid the sufferers by fire at Cosby, 10*l.*; and to those by another at Rearsby, 3*l.*

Sept. 21, 1725, Thomas Ludlam elected mayor; Thomas Johnson, William Lee, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1726, John Guthridge elected mayor; John Willows, William Brushfield, chamberlains.

GEORGE II.

Sept. 21, 1727, William Page elected mayor; Joshua Goodrich, Edmund Ludlam, chamberlains.

Paid to the sufferers by fire at Hinckley, 50*l.*

August 18, at Leicester, about eight in the evening, there happened a violent storm of hail and rain, attended with terrible thunder and lightning, which lasted two hours. Pieces of five inches in length, and hail-stones two inches in circumference, fell; which killed some hundreds of birds, that were found next morning in the gardens within the town. The streets were so flooded, that scarcely one house in ten but had its first floor filled with such quantities of water, that the people were obliged to carry it out in pails; and some cellars were overflowed six feet deep, whereby several of the inhabitants sustained great damage. Many waggon-loads of ice were to be seen the Saturday morning following. Those who had been at sea, and saw this storm, compared it to the breaking of water-spouts coming down in streams. This happened on a race-day; and, it is believed, the first year of the races being changed from the Abbey meadow to St. Mary's field.

Sept. 21, 1743, Samuel Belton elected mayor; Thomas Chapman, Joseph Hall, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1744, Thomas Ayre elected mayor; James Sismey, John Hammond, chamberlains.

The rebellion in this year occasioned many and frequent alarms in Leicester[3].

Sept. 21, 1745, Joseph Denshire elected mayor; William Higginson, Robert Belton, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1746, Thomas Topp was elected mayor; Nicholas Throsby, John Westley, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1747, John Smalley elected mayor; Samuel Brown, Samuel Oliver, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1748, Robert Hall was elected mayor; Henry Guthridge, Richard Beal, chamberlains.

Sept. 30, the devisees of the Mills, &c. named by the will of Thomas Carter, sold to Jane Flower, for the sum of 270*l.* the purchase made of the Corporation by Mr. Carter, in 1685, subject to the annual reserved rent belonging to the Crown.

In this year a bill was framed for establishing a regular watch, cleansing the streets, maintaining the wells and pumps in the streets, and lighting the town with lamps, but it did not pass into an act.

About the beginning of the year 1749, efforts were made to restrain non-freemen from enjoying the privileges of exercising their trades, &c. in Leicester, except on market and fair days, according to former usage[4].

Sept. 21, 1749, Thomas Phipps elected mayor; Anthony Ward, John Wigley, chamberlains.

[1] "The business of an election about this period had so inflamed some of the incendiaries of this town, as to paste up against the walls of several public places treasonable papers of a very atrocious nature: and the two contending parties shewed great zeal in discovering the offenders to be of the contrary interest to themselves. Men, women, and children, took an active part in the contention; invectives of the most horrid kind were thrown out against each other without the least reserve. In short, things were carried to such a height, that a Mr. Norton, a lawyer, a man of fair character, with some others, were by the Corporation's friends suspected to be the authors (though they sent an early account of the treasonable papers to Government), and were taken before the magistrates of the Borough. When under examination, to the astonishment of every beholder, Mr. Norton faltered in his reply, became speechless, and died without a groan, Feb. 1, 1738." Throsby.

[3] "When the rebels were at Derby, this town was thinned of more than half its inhabitants. Warm and threatening partizans in the cause of their king, while Charles was at a distance, appeared in arms at mock fights in the Castle-yard, but, when his army arrived at Derby, they deserted the parade, and sneaked away with the aged, the women, and the children, to seek asylums under the humble roofs of neighbouring villages. Those who were left at home were some of them busied in depositing their valuables in the earth, and others in roasting and boiling to accommodate the unwelcome guests, on their hourly expected arrival—scouring parties, messengers on foot and on horseback, were sent to bring intelligence of their approach. Sometimes they were at Loughborough, sometimes at Rothley, and sometimes near Leicester. Frightened servants, who were kept at home with some masters of families, were in convulsions, at the idea of being defiled and murdered by the rebel army. The mayor was surrounded by a few of his brethren (who had resolution to stay at home) and his servants, all in continual fear; while some, who favoured the old cause, prayed fervently in secret for the success of the Prince's arms. In this state were things at Leicester, when news was brought that the little army of the Pretender was hastening back towards Scotland, and the duke of Cumberland in forwardness to attack him: which he did, soon after, at Culloden, with success; but, alas! some say, without mercy." Throsby.

[4] "One Green, a watchmaker, made no little stand against the Corporation laws and charters in this particular. I have not less than 60 quarto pages in MS. of the transactions. The following abridgement contains sufficient on that head. It shews also that the charter, given by King John, p. 97, is the first charter known to be granted to the burgesses of Leicester. One Stubbs, a glover, resisting the bye-law of the Corporation, which was made to exclude non-freemen of the Borough from exercising trades within their jurisdiction, occasioned a case to be drawn up, and laid before sir John Strange and sir Dudley Rider, in 1749; which case stated, that it appeared, by the first charter extant, that of King John, in the first year of his reign, that the burgesses of Leicester had certain privileges granted them, particularly that of being free from tolls throughout England. It stated also that, time immemorial, non-freemen were not suffered to exercise their trades and callings within the liberties of the Borough, excepting on market and fair-days. Further, that the charter of Elizabeth, granted in the 41st year of her reign, empowered the Corporation to make bye-laws for the regulating the antient usage of the town with respect to trades, offices, and business, ordaining such penalties and fines, in cases of non-compliance, as they should think fit, so as they were not made contrary to the law of the land. The mayor and aldermen, in September 1681, made a bye-law, in consideration of some efforts being made by non-freemen to exercise their trades within the limits of the Borough contrary to antient usage; reciting, that the freemen were liable to serve many town offices, which subjected them to loss of time and expences, for which they ought to have some encouragement and privileges above those of strangers. It further recited, that at a common hall, holden in the Borough in the 8th year of King James I. it was ordained, that every person selling articles openly within the limits of the Borough, non-freemen, excepting on market and fair-days, should forfeit 40*s.* for every month wherein he should offend; but, notwithstanding, persons had notoriously offended against the said bye-law and antient customs: It was therefore enacted, by a bye-law, at the request of the common council, that if any person or persons, not being freemen, should at any time exercise their trades and callings contrary to antient usage, he or they should forfeit 20*s.* to the mayor, bailiffs, &c. of the Borough, "to be recovered by action of debt, bill, or plaint, in any of his Majesty's Courts of Record, or to be levied by distress." The said bye-law was approved and allowed by the judges of assize next held at Leicester after the making thereof. After this, it appears that no non-freeman ever attempted to offend against this bye-law till the year 1730, when Stubbs above-mentioned refused to buy his freedom, and traded in defiance of the bye-law. The Corporation therefore commenced an action of debt in the year 1730, upon the bye-law of 1681. The cause being at issue upon nil debet, the same was tried. It coming out upon evidence that foreigners and non-freemen were always permitted to use and exercise their trades and occupations within the said Borough, as well as the freemen thereof, upon market-days and fair-days, the plaintiffs were non-suited. The question to sir Dudley Rider and sir John Strange in 1749 was thus: "If the Corporation should commence an action upon the case, upon the said customs, with an exception of fair-days and market-days (as the custom truly is), against any person not being free

Sept. 21, 1750, Thomas Martin elected mayor; Clement Streeton, Joseph Chambers, chamberlains.

On the last day of September, a severe shock of an earthquake was felt in Leicester and its vicinity, which created a general alarm. It happened about half after twelve at noon, and was perceived generally in the county, in most parts of Lincolnshire, and part of Northamptonshire. The houses tottered, plates and glasses fell from the shelves, and slates, tiles, and some chimnies, fell from the houses; but, happily, no greater mischief was done. In some churches, where service was not over (it being on a Sunday), the people ran from their devotions in the utmost consternation. The shock was attended with a rumbling noise[1]."

Sept. 21, 1752, Richard Denshire elected mayor; Richard Roberts, John Miles, chamberlains.

At the assizes for this county, which ended the 18th of August 1753, the rev. Mr. Hubbard received sentence of death, for robbing Mrs. Burbage of Melton. On the day the robbery was committed, he dined with Mrs. Burbage at Oakham, whom he followed at a distance some miles towards home; he then, disguising himself with a cloak and visor, rode up to her, and ordered her to deliver her money, which she complying with he rode off; but he was detected by Mrs. Burbage having a knowledge of his horse. In consideration of his function he was transported.

Sept. 21, 1753, Thomas Chapman elected mayor; Hamlet Clark, John Fisher, chamberlains.

A violent contest, fraught with mischief, happened at this time for members to serve in Parliament for Leicester, called Mitford's opposition; when the attempt to inclose the South Fields was a pretence, at least, for the destruction of private as well as public property that ensued[2].

Sept. 21, 1755, James Sismey elected mayor; William Clark, Thomas Streeton, chamberlains.

In the Spring of 1756, Count Beauville, with about 30 French officers, who were taken prisoners prior to the declaration of war, were sent to Leicester, where they remained till they were exchanged in October 1757. During their stay at Leicester, it was computed that they expended 9000*l.* some of them being gentlemen of the first rank in France. For their genteel behaviour, they were much esteemed by the inhabitants of Leicester; and they mingled in all polite assemblies with, as it were, a native agreeableness.

June 14, 1756, in Leicester, between the hours of 8 and 10, there was a remarkable heavy shower of rain, attended with incessant claps of thunder, and very alarming lightning, which was followed with a heavy hail-storm, during which was seen a ball of fire, which divided into particles, and vanished without doing any damage.

September 21, 1756, Edmund Ludlam elected mayor; John Gamble, Cornelius Norton, chamberlains.

September 21, 1757, Joseph Hall elected mayor; William Holmes, John-Cox Brown, chamberlains.

Wheat was sold in Leicester market, in this year, for 9*s.* a strike; and, in consequence of the high price of corn, the people grew tumultuous. In this town they forced the corn from the inns into the market, but offered no injury to the person of any one. At Mountsorell a mob destroyed a bolting-mill, from whence they went to Sileby and Loughborough, and likewise destroyed the bolting-mills in those places. In other parts of the country disturbances of the like kind happened.

September 21, 1759, Nicholas Throsby elected mayor; Thomas Astle, Benjamin Sutton, chamberlains.

England this year was alarmed by a threatened invasion from France.

At a common hall, held Nov. 23, 1759, the mayor was empowered to subscribe 100*l.* for the laudable purpose of aiding government during the war, by giving large bounties for able-bodied men to serve in the fleets and armies. A spirited address was printed to the friends of government on this occasion, to urge them to join the Corporation in this laudable measure; which was followed by a large subscription from individuals.

The mayor was also empowered to give a grand banquet at the 'Change to the duke of Grafton, and the officers of the Suffolk militia, which then lay at Leicester, officered by the first characters in that county. It was then considered the most elegant and costly treat ever given by the Corporation, and one of the most inebriating. Mr. Mayor at night was assisted by the duke down stairs; and the duke, soon after, was assisted to his carriage by the town servants, there not being a soul left in the room capable of affording help to enfeebled limbs: field officers and aldermen, captains and common-council-men, were perfectly at rest—all were levelled by the mighty power of wine[3].

Sept, 21, 1760, John Westley elected mayor; James Cooper, William Mason, chamberlains.

GEORGE III.

On the 25th of October, 1760[4], his present Majesty began his auspicious reign.

Sept. 21, 1761, Samuel Brown elected mayor; John Cooper, John Poynton, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1762, Samuel Oliver elected mayor; Tyringham Palmer, William Stephens, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1763, Henry Guthridge elected mayor; James Bates, Robert Peach, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1764, Richard Beal elected mayor; John Pocklington, Samuel Woodford, chamberlains.

free of the said Borough, for using and exercising any trade within the said Borough on those days that are neither market-days or fair-days there; if the defendant should give the plaintiffs notice to produce at the trial of the cause the said bye-laws, which are founded on a custom, without any exception of market-days and fair-days, and the bye-laws should be produced, what effect would the bye-laws (they being Corporate acts) have upon the trial, they shewing a different custom than that which will be declared upon. Will that evidence nonsuit the plaintiffs, although the custom declared upon should be fully proved, beyond any doubt, to be as laid in the declaration; and is it adviseable, upon the circumstances of this case, for the Corporation to commence and try such action for supporting the said custom?"—"I am of opinion that the above-mentioned mistake of the custom in the introduction to the bye-laws will not be conclusive to the Corporation, but that they may be allowed to prove the custom by antient witnesses; and if they do prove it, they ought not to be nonsuited on account of the description in the bye-law, which is only more extensive than the true custom, but really contains nothing that is contradictory to the custom. I think, therefore, it is adviseable for the Corporation to try the action proposed for the supporting their custom. J. STRANGE, April 10, 1749."—"The production of the bye-law, though it would be of some weight, yet it is but evidence, I think, not sufficient to overturn a custom fully proved by other evidence; therefore, it may be adviseable for the Corporation to commence a new action on the foot of the custom, as it can be clearly proved by witnesses. D. RYDER, 29 April, 1749."

"I know not in what manner the trial ended, if there were any; but some time afterwards Green the watchmaker and others set the bye-laws at defiance; and from that time to this the Borough has been and is open to all descriptions of men, excepting publicans." Throsby.

[4] "In this year a shocking murder was committed on the body of an old soldier, a pedlar, by a young man and his wife of the name of Cherry, who the preceding night slept in the same room at a common lodging-house in Church-gate, opposite to the Butt Close. It appeared that they from necessity, by their own account, intended only to rob him; but the old man, being strong and powerful, overcame the young man, who, to disengage himself, murdered him with two of the poor pedlar's own knives: the woman assisting, they stabbed him to the heart. They were hanged together, near the place where they committed the murder. The woman had been well educated, and persisted in her innocence. When they were pinioning her arms in the gaol the morning of the execution, she fainted away; but, recovering, she with fortitude, and seemingly innocent composure, said, "My God died to appease a multitude, and why should I repine?" Sept. 21, 1766, John Fisher elected mayor; John Coleman, Joseph Johnson, chamberlains.

In the Corporation charter of King James it is expressed, that on Monday after Martinmas-day, the newly-elected mayor shall attend at the great hall of the Castle, and take an oath, "before our seneschall," that he shall perform well and faithfully all and every antient custom, jurisdiction, privilege, and preheminence, of the Duchy of Lancaster, within the Borough of Leicester, being a part or parcel of the antient Duchy of Lancaster, according to the best of his knowledge. It was a custom, before Mr. Fisher's time, to slope the great mace when Mr. Mayor and his attendants arrived at a certain place within the precincts of the Castle, which was omitted when he went to take the oath; in consequence, the Constable of the Castle, or his Deputy, refused him admittance. This was at the eve of an election, which was conducted with much party heat. However, since this happened, Mr. Mayor goes in private to the Castle, without ceremony, to comply with the requisition of the charter.

Provisions having arisen to a great price, by forestalling and other evil practices, the common people at Hinckley assembled in a riotous manner, and upon the road leading thither they stopped some waggon-loads of cheese, and distributed their contents among the mob, to the amount of 87*l.* And in about three weeks after, being the last day of September 1766, a great riot on the same account happened in Leicester. Mr. Pridmore, of Market Harborough, lodged a considerable quantity of cheese at a warehouse at the Blue Bell inn, contrary to the advice of the magistrates, and was imprudent enough to take it away before the fair. Accordingly, a waggon-load was sent thence about one o'clock; but the poor, upon an alarm being given, stopped the waggon, and distributed the cheese among the mob, before the magistrates could be acquainted with the riot. The mob by this time was become extremely numerous; and proceeded to Mr. Pridmore's warehouse, which they broke open, and began to give away the cheese before the justices arrived. The whole town was now alarmed—the magistrates expostulated with the incensed multitude, but to little effect. At length the drum was ordered to beat to arms (the militia being in Leicester), and the soldiers were soon in order upon the spot, headed by Mr. Mortimer, one of their officers. With their bayonets fixed, they with difficulty cleared the streets; but notwithstanding this, and the riot act being read, the people refused to disperse, and, behaved unruly at some little distance from the soldiers. Then the magistrates ordered all the cheese that was in the market-place to be removed to the 'Change, under a strong guard; and promised that the cheese should be sold at 3*d. per* pound. Upon this, the mob emptied in a short time all the warehouses and inns, where it had been lodged for sale, and hucksters' shops also of the cheese, and took it to the 'Change. Towards the evening, the soldiers being dismissed, the mob collected again, and grew more tumultuous than before, and searched every waggon which came into Leicester that night. They were now no less in number than 4000, and seized almost every thing in their way. The drums were again ordered to beat to arms; and there seemed confusion on the face of every one. Here a lawless mob, joined by numbers from the neighbouring villages; and there the soldiers running with their arms to join the main body, who were marching towards the waggons. Peaceable people, with the magistrates, procured torches lighted: but the lights were almost as instantly struck out by the mob. In the end, however, the soldiers protected and secured the waggons; and the next day some of the rioters were cast into prison. But the mob assembled again, and broke all the gaol windows. Some of these rioters also were secured in prison; and, to prevent a rescue, a captain's guard of 100 men, with 15 rounds of powder and ball, stood to guard the prison, where they continued all night. The mob, after this spirited conduct, dispersed. In several other places in the county there were riots about the same time. At Hinckley two principals in this riot were rescued, when in custody of some constables, by the mob there; but, on a troop of dragoons, and a party of the militia of the county, marching to the assistance of the civil power, some of the rioters were taken, and brought, under a strong guard, to prison, where they were for a time secured in the dungeon, loaded with irons. Afterward several other rioters were taken up, and lodged in prison. At Sheepshed, it was with difficulty some rioters were taken who had been concerned in desperate outrages. These rioters were tried in the succeeding March, 1767; when, in consideration of their long imprisonment, their punishment was but inconsiderable: some were fined in small sums, and others were imprisoned for a certain portion of time. Thus ended, by the spirited behaviour of those in power, one of the most alarming tumults which has been known in these parts.

Sept. 21, 1767, William Holmes elected mayor; John Lewin, Henry Watchorn, chamberlains.

In his mayoralty was a violent contest; in which the Hon. Booth Grey and Colonel Coote were chosen to represent this place in Parliament, in opposition to Mr. Darker and Mr. Palmer. This contest lasted 14 days[1].

Sept. 21, 1768, John Westley elected mayor; but he dying, John Gamble was chosen; William Brown, William Simpson, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1769, Joseph Chambers elected mayor; John Hartall, Thomas Phipps, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1770, James Cooper elected mayor; John Clark, Samuel Topp, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1771, John Cartwright elected mayor; William Taylor, Thomas Barwell, chamberlains.

At the general quarter sessions of the peace, held at Leicester Castle in the spring of 1772, a woman, deaf and dumb, gave evidence by signs against the father of her bastard child, to the satisfaction of a crowded court.

June 27, a terrible storm of hail and rain, attended with thunder and lightning, did much damage in Leicester to chimneys and roofs of houses. At Wistow, several large elms were split from the top to the bottom, and some were torn up by the roots.

In July, a fire broke out in the night-time at the Lion and Lamb inn, which totally destroyed three bays of buildings, and greatly damaged some others.

Sept. 21, 1772, Robert Peach elected mayor; Edward Price, William Oldham, chamberlains.

The manufacturers of stockings in Leicester, and the villages adjacent, hearing some unfavourable reports respecting a stocking-frame which had been made by an ingenious mechanic, assembled on Monday March 15, 1773, for the purpose of destroying it; it being supposed so to expedite their business, that might occasion numbers of them to be unemployed. But, though the report was groundless, they dared even to force themselves into the 'Change, where it had been lodged by the order of the mayor; took it thence, and carried it in triumph round the town, and at last destroyed it, and dispersed without further mischief. The conduct of Mr. Peach, then mayor, and Mr. Simpson and Mr. Good, proprietors of the frame, was highly applauded by the inhabitants of Leicester in general on this occasion, in endeavouring, by gentle means, to convince the stocking-makers of the impropriety of their conduct.

[1] "Since this election an innocent holiday has been gradually dwindling into disuse. It had long before been customary, on Easter Monday, for the mayor and his brethren, in their scarlet gowns, attended by their proper officers in form, to go to a certain close, called Black-Annis's-Bower Close, (see vol. III. p 1051), parcel of, or bordering upon, Leicester Forest, to see the diversion of hunting, or, rather, the trailing of a cat before a pack of hounds: a custom, perhaps, originating out of a claim to the royalty of the Forest. Hither, on a fair-day, resorted the young and old, and those of all denominations. In the greatest harmony the Spring was welcomed. The morning was spent in various amusements and athletic exercises, till a dead cat, about noon, was prepared by anniseed water, for commencing the mock hunting of the hare. In about half an hour after the cat had been trailed at the tail of an horse over the grounds, in zigzag directions, the hounds were directed to the spot where the cat had been trailed from. Here the hounds gave tongue, in glorious concert. The people from the various eminencies, who had placed themselves to behold the sight, with shouts of rapture, gave applause; the horsemen, dashing after the hounds through foul passages and over fences, were emulous for taking the lead of their fellows. It was a scene, upon the whole, of joy; the governing and the governed, in the habits of freedom, enjoying together an innocent, and recreating amusement, serving to unite them in bonds of mutual friendship, rather than to embitter their days with discord and disunion. As the cat had been trailed to the mayor's door, through some of the principal streets, consequently the dogs and horsemen followed. After the hunt was over, the mayor gave a handsome treat to his friends. In this manner the day ended." Throsby.

Sept. 21, 1774, Samuel Oliver elected mayor; Sampson Chapman, John Parsons, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1775, Joseph Johnson elected mayor; William Astle, Hamlett Clark, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1776, Samuel Jordan elected mayor; Edward Sutton, Robert Dickinson, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1777, John Coleman elected mayor; Joseph Neale, Thomas Bass Oliver, chamberlains.

A remarkable trial took place in August 1778. Francis Soules, a French teacher in Leicester, was indicted for the murder of John Fenton, who lost his life in the amiable office of preventing, as he thought, the murder of his own brother[2].

Sept. 21, 1778, John Pocklington elected mayor; John Eames, Thomas Lockwood, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1779, John Gregory elected mayor; Joseph Burbage, John Mansfield, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1780, Henry Watchorn elected mayor; Benjamin Gregory, Thomas Cristy, chamberlains.

A fire at the Lion and Lamb, in December, burnt six tons of hay, and the building it was in.

Sept. 21, 1781, Thomas Barwell elected mayor; James Willey, Thomas Jeffcut, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1782, James Bishop elected mayor; William Bellamy, William Bishop, chamberlains.

Cockmuckhill houses were taken down, and almshouses in their stead built, lower down the Belgrave-gate, by subscription.

Aug. 18, 1783. About 9 at night, a ball of fire, with a long train, was seen passing over Leicester, apparently about 40 yards above the houses, in a direction North and South-west. It was seen in other parts of the kingdom; and some affirmed it was accompanied by the shock of an earthquake.

Sept. 21, 1783, William Oldham elected mayor; Edward Harris, John-Bass Oliver, chamberlains.

In February 1784, there was a grand masquerade on the river, near the Bath gardens, during a hard frost. The gentleman performers attracted an amazing concourse of people, and afforded much pleasantry in their masques. Fahrenheit's thermometer was, Dec. 26, sunk to 39 degrees; which is eleven lower than the freezing point, and eight lower than it is in most winters.

The abolition of throwing at cocks on Shrove-Tuesday was begun, and nearly effected, in Mr. Oldham's mayoralty.

Sept. 21, 1784, Joseph Chambers elected mayor; Abel Webster, William Watts, chamberlains.

This gentleman's third mayoralty. A thing very unusual in so large a corporate body.

Mail-coaches first came to Leicester July 26, 1785.

Sept. 21, 1785, John Parsons elected mayor; but he dying, Robert Peach succeeded; James Mallet, J. P. Allamand, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1786, Hamlett Clark elected mayor; John Slater, John Saywell, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1787, Robert Dickinson elected mayor; James Cook, Thomas Peach, chamberlains.

A riotous mob assembled, in consequence of an attempt to introduce into Leicester a spinning machine, Nov. 30, 1787. The people assembled for the purpose of destroying it. They searched many houses where they thought any part of it was concealed; and at length broke into Mr. Wetston's house in North-gate-street in the night-time, and destroyed his furniture, stock in trade, and trading utensils, as being a principal (as the mob conceived) in introducing into the town a piece of mechanism that would eventually rob them of that labour which supplied their wants.

This year the inhabitants began to tax themselves (without applying for an Act of Parliament) with the expence of paving the streets after the London fashion.

Sept. 21, 1788, Henry Watchorn elected mayor; Edmund Swinfen, William Parsons, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1789, John Dalby elected mayor; Thomas Chatwin, Edward Marston, chamberlains.

The election this year for representatives to serve in Parliament for the Borough was carried on with warmth and intemperance; which was opportunely stopped by withdrawing a candidate on each side. The gentlemen who retired to prevent further mischief, and an intolerable growing expence, were Mr. Montelieu and Mr. Halled.

Sept. 21, 1790, John Eames elected mayor; John Freer (who dying, was succeeded by Joseph Johnson), Thomas Wright, chamberlains.

A rigid examination into the weights and measures used in this town, was a popular act of this magistrate.

Sept. 21, 1791, Joseph Neal elected mayor; Thomas Read, Samuel Clark, chamberlains.

May 19, 1792, a number of disorderly persons met in the market-place in the evening; and, because they could not lower the price of butchers' meat, they lowered the butchers' stalls, by throwing them down; after which they amused themselves by breaking every individual butcher's windows in the town.

[1] "The great attention of our present chief magistrate, not only to the discharge of the principal duties of his office, but also to accommodating the public, and adding ornaments to the town, is so remarkable, that we cannot but mention some instances to his honour. The order of Common-Hall for taking down the four gates of this town, we are assured, was complied with at his particular motion, and has been executed under his immediate inspection; the East-gate is already cleared away, and a commodious passage opened, which, when completed, we are told, will measure 54 feet wide; and the West-gate is likewise now taking down. Unaccountable as it may appear to a stranger, in this improved age, yet it is a fact, that Leicester, a flourishing town of trade, situated in the middle of England, had her antique gates—those monuments of gothic barbarism, remaining, till this very period, so narrow that a foot passenger meeting a carriage, went in danger of his life—and so low that a high-loaded waggon, or a load of hay, &c. could not pass under them into the market-place, or other inner parts of the town. And what is more extraordinary, we had no other passage but upon sufferance (through one yard only) by which such loaded carriages could pass. When the public money with which Bodies Corporate are intrusted, is disposed of in public acts of utility like the above, it is truly answering the intent of our benevolent ancestors who left the means, and a real dignity to that magistrate who executes the purpose. The beast-market in this borough is directed by Mr. Mayor to be removed from the place where it is now held, and where it is a great nuisance to all the inhabitants residing there, to the horse-fair, and will be held for the future, from the Three-crowns corner to the top of that street. Leicester Journal, April 9, 1774.

[2] "Soules and James, the brother of the unfortunate John, were playing together at billiards at the Dolphin inn; a quarrel arose about 6*s.*; violent words passed, in which Soules conceived himself reflected upon by Mr. Fenton, and in consequence borrowed, or purchased, a brace of pistols, with which he soon returned to the billiard-room, and challenged Fenton to fight, laying one down on the table. Mr. F. hastily took it up, and ran down stairs with it for the purpose of informing the mayor of the transactions, thinking his life in danger. Soules immediately followed to find him, went once or twice to his mother's house, the Green Dragon in the market-place, and enquired after him. John, the young man who was killed, was sitting with company in the house; and, knowing the business in some measure that Soules was upon, seized the Frenchman by the hams, and was endeavouring to thrust him out of the house, when Soules, pulling out a pistol from his pocket, shot him in the neck; of which wounds he died next day. The trial was before Mr. Justice Ashurst. Soules's counsel pleaded, that in the prisoner was no malice prepense, and requested to have the verdict, if it affected his life, made special; to which the Court consented. The Judge, after summing up the evidence, put the following questions to the jury: 1. Do the jury agree to the representations given by the evidence touching the facts at the billiard table? Agreed.—2. Did the prisoner fire the pistol designedly, or did it go off by accident? Designedly.—3. Did the prisoner go to the Green Dragon only to recover his property (the pistol), or with an intent to excite James Fenton to fight a duel, or to do him some mischief? He went there with a design only to recover his property. The next assizes following, by the Judges opinion, it appeared that he was guilty of murder; but a special messenger also appeared, at the same time, with his Majesty's pardon." Throsby.—An epitaph on Fenton will be found under the parish of St. Martin.

Sept. 21, 1792, Joseph Burbidge elected mayor: William Firmadge, Sam. Towndrow, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1793, John Mansfield elected mayor; John Stevenson, Mark Oliver, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1794, Benjamin Gregory elected mayor; John Reynolds, John Walker, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1795, William Dabbs elected mayor; Thomas Copson, David Harris, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1796, Hamlett Clark (second time) elected mayor; Will. Hall, James Cort, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1797, Thomas Jeffcutt elected mayor; Michael Miles, Robert Walker, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1798, William Bellamy elected mayor; John Gregory, Charles Sansome, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1799, William Bishop elected mayor; John Jackson, Francis Burgess, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1800, John Saywell elected mayor; Thomas Sutton, Thomas Miller, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1801, Thomas Peach elected mayor; Robert Johnson, Joseph Dalby, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1802, John Slater elected mayor; James Mallett, James Bankart, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1803, Hamlett Clark (third time) elected mayor; John Sarson, Isaac Lovell, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1804, Edmund Swinfen elected mayor; William Heard, William Sultzer, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1805, William Parsons elected mayor; George Ireland, John Davenport, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1806, Joseph Johnson elected mayor; Thomas Yates, John Adams, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1807, Thomas Wright elected mayor; Thomas Bryan, Thomas Cook, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1808, Samuel Clarke elected mayor; William Thompson, James Burbidge, chamberlains.

Sept. 21, 1809, William Firmadge elected mayor; Charles Coleman, Thomas Marston, chamberlains.

BAILIFFS OF LEICESTER.

37 Hen. III. Roger de Ordener.

16 Edw. I. Tho. de Ryder and Will. de Gracna.

8 Hen. V. Henry Forster, was then Bailiff.

24 Hen. VI. Richard Hotoft and Thomas Meryng, esquires. Their deputies then were, William Braunston and Alexander Villers.

31 Hen. VI. Richard Hotoft continued Bailiff; and William Hynde was his deputy.

3 Edw. IV. Peter Curtes was Bailiff, and so continued in 17 Edw. IV. and for several years afterward; for he, or one of the same name, was Mayor of the town in 22 Edw. IV.; and was a member of parliament for the town in 17 and 22 Edw. IV., and again 1 Ric. III., and 4 and 7 Hen. VII.

14 Hen. VII. Robert Orton was Bailiff; and so continued 7 Hen. VIII.

23 Hen. VIII. Thomas Cattelyn was then Bailiff; and also in 28 Hen. VIII.

1 Edw. VI. Thomas Danet was Bailiff.

March 11, 6 Edw. VI. at a common hall, it was agreed to send Mr. Boughton, vicar of St. Martin's, to London, to try (among other things) to get the Bailiwick of Leicester in fee-farm to the town. And it seems that they did obtain a grant of it for some time; for in the same year, June 20, an order was made at a common hall, that the Bailiwick should remain to one of the Mayor's brethren who had not been Mayor, to occupy every man in his order upon the bench; and that if any of the twenty-four in his course should refuse it, he should pay 40*s.* or be committed. And accordingly, on the last of November that year, Mr. Overend promised to pay 40*s.* to the Chamberlains, on Jan. 20 next, for his refusal of the Bailiwick; and so also Nov. 29, 1 Mary, Mr. Smith promised to pay 40*s.* for the like refusal.

6 Eliz. William Reynolds and Thomas Fowler were Bailiffs.

7 Eliz. William Reynolds and John Tatam.

8 Eliz. William Norys and Thomas Newcombe.

9 Eliz. James Clark and Thomas Newcombe.

10 Eliz. Nicholas Englyshe and T. Newcombe.

11 Eliz. William Shingleton; and again 12 Eliz.

Some time after this, it seems that Mr. John Danet got a patent for the Bailiwick; for July 22, 21 Eliz. it being agreed, at a common hall, to purchase the Bailiwick for the use of the town, Mr. John Stanford bought Mr. John Danet's patent, and sold it to the town for 4*l.* besides his charges; and the Town was to enter on it at Michaelmas.

June 24, 36 Eliz. John Wilne, alias Willes, being then Bailiff, it was agreed, between him and the Mayor and his brethren, that the four serjeants should attend on the Mayor as of old time was used. And May 6, 1599, he is styled the Queen's Bailiff, and was made a Mayor's brother; and Jan. 15, 1599, the company of twenty-four assured his office to him for his life, by a bond of 200*l.* under the common seal. But in the first year of King James he thought fit to procure a patent from him for the said office; which was granted to him June 6, durante bene placito. He died in 1621.

An indenture, made Dec. 20, 7 Jac. witnesseth, that whereas king James, by patents under the great seal of England and the seal of the Duchy, dated 17 April, 7 Jac. granted to the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of Leicester, power to elect a sufficient person to be steward or town-clerk, and so many fit persons to be bailiff or bailiffs of Leicester, and keeper or keepers of his gaol; and they to have such reasonable fees as of antient time they have had: The mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, in performance of certain agreements, grant unto Henry earl of Huntingdon, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, that they, as often as occasion requires, may, every first term, nominate a fit person to be steward of the said Borough; and that the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, will elect and admit the person so nominated within ten days after he is so nominated to be steward of the town for his life: And that, at the third, fifth, seventh, and ninth avoidance, the present avoidance being counted for the first, and from thenceforth at every such other term, the said earl, and heirs male of his body, may nominate a fit person to be steward; which person so nominated the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses shall admit to be steward for life within ten days after such nomination, as long as the said earl, or any heir male of his body, shall be living; saving to the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, the nomination, &c. of the second, fourth, sixth, eighth, and tenth stewards, and so in every such other turn. In like manner, the mayor, &c. grant to the said earl, and the heirs male of his body, to nominate to the mayor, &c. any fit person to be bailiff of the said town, and keeper of the gaol, for the second turn thereof, accounting this present turn to be the first; and so after the second turn for the fourth, sixth, eighth, and tenth, and every such other turn, so long as he, or any heir male of his body, shall be living; and that the said mayor, &c. will elect and admit the person and persons so nominated within ten days after to be bailiff and keeper of the said gaol for his life; saving to the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, the nomination and appointment of the bailiff and keeper of the gaol for this present avoidance, as the first time, and so for the third, fifth, seventh, ninth, and eleventh turns, and every such other turn for ever, &c. The mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, gave to the said earl a bond of 1000*l.* for performance of the conditions in the indenture.

On the death of Mr. Wilne, notice was given to the earl of Huntingdon, it being his turn to nominate the next to this office; and, upon his nomination, March 7, 1621-2, Robert Wright was, by the company of twenty-four, chosen, admitted and sworn, to be Bailiff, and Keeper of the Gaol, &c. for his life.

Oct. 18, 1641, John Beeby was chosen Bailiff, and sworn Oct. 25; but he being guilty of several misdemeanours, the return of processes was taken from him Jan. 5, 1654-5; and it was ordered, that the processes of the Court of Record of the Borough should be directed to the chief serjeant at mace, or his deputy, till further order. Nevertheless he continued Bailiff in 1656.

Oct. 14, 1645. Mr. John Beeby, at a common hall, was chosen Clerk of the Statutes till May 1 next.

Sept. 1657, Thomas Henshaw and Anthony Curtis were Bailiffs.

Oct. 16, 1657, at a meeting of the Mayor and Aldermen, William Major, gent. was chosen and admitted Bailiff and Keeper of the Gaol for term of life, according to the nomination of Theophilus earl of Huntingdon. He was sworn Oct. 19; but the company protested against some words in the nomination, viz. "liberty to execute the said office by his sufficient deputy," and the word "appurtenance."

Sept. 21, 1658, William Franks and William Calles are said to be Bailiffs.

Sept. 21, 1659, Robert Erick and George Abney.

1660, William Major resumed his office; which he continued to execute till the new charter of Jac. II.

In 1685, in virtue of the said new charter, among other alterations made in the Corporation, the Chamberlains were called Bailiffs.

The following royal mandate was copied by Dr. Farmer, in the year 1760, from the original:

"James R.—Trusty and well-beloved, we greet you well. Whereas we have, by our Order in Council, thought fit to remove John Roberts, John Goodall, Thomas Ludlam, Walter Hood, Francis Ward, Gabriel Hill, Samuel Robinson, Samuel Woodland, Henry Pate, William Springthorpe, and John Crecroft, from being Aldermen of that our Borough of Leicester; Samuel Martin, Thomas Tompson, David Clay, Thomas Drake, Godfrey Borundell, George Steares, John Hardy, John Burdett, Thomas Ayres, Nicholas Allsop, Richard Mason, George Crofts, Henry Dann, John Pollard, Edward Wagstaffe, and John Roberts junior, from being Common-council-men; William Major senior from being Bailiff, John Hackles from being Town-clerk, and William Brown from being Town-solicitor of the said Borough: We have thought fit hereby to will and require you forthwith to elect and admit our trusty and well-beloved William Bentley, John Bent, John Brooksby, William Sheares, Edmund Johnson, Matthew Symonds, Richard Mason, Robert Lord, Jonathan Coleman, Henry Treene, and William Warberton, to be Aldermen; Thomas Wallings, John Kerby, Joseph Dudley, William Walker, Francis Churchman, William Harris, Tobiah Marshall, John Hevitt, John Cooke, John Hughes, John Buxstone senior, Robert Page senior, John Davy, William Page, Robert Langton, and John Warburton, to be Common-council-men; John Oneby to be Bailiff, John Creswell to be Town-clerk, and Valentine House to be Town-solicitor of our said Borough, in the room of the persons above-mentioned, without administering unto them any oath or oaths, but the usual oath for the execution of their respective places, with which we are pleased to dispense in this behalf; and for so doing this shall be your warrant: And so we bid you farewell. Given at our Court at Whitehall, the 27th day of February 1687-8, in the fourth year of our reign.

By his Majesty's command, Sunderland, P.

To our trusty and well-beloved the Mayor, Aldermen, and Corporation, of our Borough of Leicester, in our County of Leicester."

March 13, 1687-8, John Oneby, by virtue of the new charter, and the above order, was chosen Bailiff.

On revocation of that charter, Mr. Major was restored: but he declined to act; and thereupon, Dec. 18, 1688, Thomas Palmer, gent. was elected. He died Aug. 18, 1723.

Aug. 26, 1723, Leonard Piddock, gent. was unanimously elected Bailiff of the Borough and Town of Leicester, and Keeper of the Gaol there; and he made Thomas Herrick his deputy. He died in 1744.

Sept. 25, 1744, Thomas Herrick[1], gent. was unanimously chosen Bailiff of this Borough, and Keeper of the Gaol there, in the room of Leonard Piddock.

Jan. 12, 1767, John Kirkland, of Loughborough, in the county of Leicester, gent. was unanimously elected Bailiff of the said Borough and Town of Leicester, and Keeper of the Gaol there (which places were then vacant by the death of Thomas Herrick, gent. who died Dec. 10, 1766, aged 73, and was buried at St. Martin's[2].)

Sept. 26, 1771, Samuel Topp, esq. was unanimously elected Bailiff of the Borough and Town of Leicester, and Keeper of the Gaol there, in the room of John Kirkland, gent. deceased. He resigned 1779.

March 15, 1779, Edward Dawson, gent. was unanimously elected Bailiff of the Borough and Town of Leicester, and Keeper of the Gaol there, vacant by resignation. He is still Bailiff, 1809.

RECORDERS.

They seem to be first constituted by the charter of 4 Edward IV. The first whose name we meet with is, 16 Hen. VII. Thomas Jakys, who so continued till 1 Hen. VIII.; when, Dec. 20, Ralph Swyllyngton was made free, and admitted to be one of the coburgesses; but not to be charged with any office, nor be liable to be summoned by the mayor but at his own pleasure. He died 16 Hen. VIII.

16 Hen. VIII. Thomas Broksby, alias Broxby, was chosen in his room, and continued Recorder till 27 Hen. VIII. inclusive.

28 Hen VIII. John Baymond; continued till 33 Hen. VIII.; when Edward Gryffyn succeeded: and was Recorder till 3 Edw. VI. inclusive.

4 Edw. VI. John Beaumont succeeded him; and was "Magister Rotulorum Curiæ Cancellarii Domini Regis, & Recordator Leicestriæ," 5 Edw. VI.

6 Edw. VI. John Hunt.

1 Mar. John Hunt is blotted out; and in his stead is inserted Francis Fernham[3], Recorder. He was chosen burgess of parliament March 16, 1 Mar.; and again 26 Oct. 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar.; and continued Recorder Sept. 21, 3 & 4 Phil. & Mar.

3 & 4 Phil. & Mar. May 7, Francis Gyffon was chosen Recorder; and was so in September, 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar.; in which year Robert Bream, Breham, or Braham, about Christmas, became Recorder; and, Jan. 11, was chosen burgess of parliament; and so also, 2 Dec. 5 Eliz.; and again 17 April, 14 Eliz.

July 18, 17 Eliz. Richard Parkins was sworn Recorder. He had a scarlet gown voted for him, at the charge of the town, 21 Eliz. Sept. 21; and (applying himself to reading and digesting the records of the town) had a chamber fitted up and furnished for him to lye at, &c. in the Town-hall, when he came to the town.—This Mr. Parkins, a revered man in his time for learning and judgment, purchased the entire manor of Boney in Nottinghamshire, which still continues with his posterity.—In 1592, "troubled at the factions in the Town of Leicester," he wished to resign his office; but peace and concord being restored, was induced to continue Recorder (see p. 407.)—In the next year, several persons were charged with plucking wool off the backs of sheep; the North mills were redeemed, with other houses and lands (money being then at 10 per cent. interest); and Mr. George Tatham, for 15*l.* to be paid him, and Mr. Thomas for 15*l.* to be paid him, agreed to surrender up to the Town the lands and tenements in their book, of 20*l.*, and the obligation they have of the Town; and the said book and bond to be cancelled.—Oct. 29, 1593, a letter occurs, from Mr. Robert Heyrick, then mayor for the second time, to Thomas Cave, esq. high sheriff, complaining of the deficiency of the contributions of the country for relief of the visited; shewing, that, unless the contributions came in more duly, he should be forced to complain to the Queen's Council, or to set the poor people at liberty to seek for better maintenance. Other letters to the same purpose—500 or 600 poor that yet stand clear, cannot live without relief, or going into the country. Out of 21 houses visited, 35 persons have died; afterward 46 houses visited, and dead 87; and many letters to the justices of the county for weekly contributions.—In December, a letter to the Earl of Huntingdon acquaints him, that Dr. Steward and Dr. Chippingdale proceeded in their suit, against the inhabitants of Leicester, about grinding corn and multure at the Castle mills, contrary to Dr. Chippendale's promise made to the Earl, of referring it. Another letter, Feb. 5, 1593-4, states "some new houses are infected towards the South end of the town; whereby I shall hardly bring the Judge to sit at the Castle, but be forced to lodge them at Mr. Stanford's, and have them sit at our Town-hall."

[2] Where see his epitaph.

[3] Of him, and his respectable family, see vol. III. p. 103.

June 23, 1603, being Thursday, Queen Anne and Prince Henry came from Ashby-de-la-Zouch to Leicester; and that morning the Recorder came from his family residence at Boney, in order to have made a speech to them; but was prevented to do so by falling sick here, where he continued till Sunday, and then went home sick.

He died July 3; and a monument[1] on the North wall of Boney church thus perpetuates his memory:

> "Here lyeth Richard Parkins, esquire, justice of peace and quorum in the county of Nott. and recorder of the towns of Leicester and Nott. and an ancient utter barrister in the Inner Temple; who married and took to wife Elizabeth Barlowe, then a widow, late wife of one Humfrey Barlowe, of Stoke, in the county of Darby, esq. deceased, being the eldest daughter of Aden Beresford, of Fenne Bentlye, in the county of Darby, esq. deceased; by whom the said Richard had 8 children, viz. 4 sons and 4 daughters; that is to say, sir George Parkins, knight, his son and heir, Adrian Parkins, John Parkins, Aden Parkins, Fraunces, Anne, Elizab. Margaret; and died the 3rd day of July, 1603. Upon whose soul, &c."

July 8, 1603, John Stanford[2], of Barkby, esq. was chosen to be Recorder; and Nov. 25 it was agreed, at a common hall, to allow him 6l. 13s. 4d. per annum as his fee: but he died soon after, viz. Dec. 1.

Whereupon, Dec. 14, Augustin Nicolls[3], serjeant at law, was chosen in his place by the aldermen, and was sworn Feb. 28 following. He was knighted in 1607, and made a Judge of the Common Pleas 1612.

Dec. 1, 1612, Francis Harvey, of Northampton, a bencher of the Middle Temple, was chosen; and it was ordered, that he should be paid yearly 5l. for his fee as Recorder, and at every assizes 20s. towards his charges; and that the town should bear his charges at his coming to Leicester, at all times, about the town's business. And Mr. Justice Nicolls was sent to acquaint him with this order; and acquaint him that the town was then poor, and that the Recorders formerly had only 4l. per annum, and less. In 1624, he was made a judge of the Common Pleas; of which he gave notice to the town in October.

Oct. 24, 1624, Thomas Chapman[4], esq. was chosen, and continued Recorder in 1652.

1653, James Winstanley, esq. was Recorder; and, refusing to conform, surrendered in 1662, when Robert Harding, esq. was chosen, Sept. 12. He was afterwards knighted; and continued Recorder in 1679.

1680, Nathan Wrighte[5], esq. On surrender of the charter, 1684, Theophilus earl of Huntingdon was Recorder, and Nathan Wrighte Deputy Recorder. But the charter being restored in 1688, Nathan Wrighte became Recorder again; and was made serjeant in 1693; and continued Recorder till 1697.

Sept. 1, 1697, Laurence Carter junior, esq. (son of Laurence Carter, esq. of the Newark[6]) was chosen Recorder; called to be serjeant April 30, 1724; knighted May 4, 1724; and October 16, 1726, made a baron of the Exchequer. He was of a respectable family of that name in Leicester, whose descendants still rank in the first class of its inhabitants. This gentleman (being a barrister at law, and a near relation of a worthy person, who is mentioned in p. 438 as a projector or great encourager of the scheme for conveying water by pipes to the houses of the inhabitants of Leicester) was fixed on, almost unanimously, to succeed Nathan Wrighte in the Recordership of this Borough in 1696, in which office he continued till 1729. He was thrice chosen representative for the Town; and resigned that honourable station on being appointed one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer. He died in 1744, at the age of 73. Baron Carter resided within the Newark, Leicester, in the dwelling afterward occupied by Mr. Coltman, a manufacturer, on the site of which stood the beautiful collegiate church[7].

William Wrighte, esq. (a younger son of sir Nathan Wrighte, late lord keeper) was elected in 1729. He resigned in 1763; and died at Envill in Staffordshire June 4, 1765, æt. 71[8].

1763, Robert Bakewell[9], esq.; removed by a court of aldermen in 1766.

William Burleton, esq. LL. D. of the University of Oxford 1754, was chosen Recorder in 1766. He was in the commission of the peace for the county of Leicester, and major of the Militia on its first establishment. In 1785, he was also elected recorder of Shaftesbury; and died Nov. 1, 1786, aged 66[10].

Feb. 8, 1787, Edmund Wigley[11], of the Middle Temple, London, esq. was unanimously elected Recorder, in the place of William Burleton, esq. deceased.

Feb. 14, 1798, John Vaughan, esq. of the Temple, London, barrister at law, was unanimously elected Recorder, in the room of Edmund Wigley, esq. (whose resignation of that office was accepted.) He is now (1809) a serjeant at law, and continues Recorder of Leicester.

SENESCHALS; or Stewards of the Court[12].

The first of these whom we have met with is Thomas Ward, who in 1599 is styled Steward of the Court; and, Sept. 4 in that year, was made free for a pottle of wine, and soon after was chosen to be an alderman; and Feb. 22, 1599-1600, at a meeting of the mayor's brethren, had a patent delivered to him, in consideration of 6l. 13s. 4d. for the enjoyment of his office for term of his life: And he promised not to sell or assign over the said office to any person but whom the mayor and aldermen agree to.

Christopher Tamworth[13], in 1603, August 4, exhibited a patent from sir John Fortescue, knt. chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, for the Stewardship, the validity of which the Corporation disputed; whereupon they were, Dec. 28, served with a privy seal, or injunction, to suffer him to enjoy the office, or to appear next term in the Duchy chamber to answer the same: which last it was agreed that the mayor should do. But, upon the King's grant of a new charter, 1609, he was established in his office. He made his will April 28, 1624, in which he made several bequests for pious and charitable uses, which was proved Sept. 26 the same year.

John Oneby, esq. of Hinckley (of whom an account will be given under the history of that town) is the next that we meet with as Seneschal.

Thomas Staveley[1] succeeded him. He died Jan. 2, 1683; and was buried at St. Mary's, an. æt. 57.

John Major, barrister, was chosen in his room, Jan. 15, 1683-4; and thereupon presented to the Corporation two great silver candlesticks.

Simon Barwell, attorney, was nominated by the earl of Huntingdon, March 31, 1703, and elected. He died June 24, 1720, and was buried at St. Martin's church July 6.

William Wrighte was elected July 3, 1720, and sworn July 8. He made Mr. Richard Hill his deputy; and in 1729 was appointed Recorder; see p. 453.

He was succeeded by Norrice Cradock, gent. Jan. 11, 1729.

Norrice Cradock, esq. Steward of the Court of Record of this Borough, was removed from his office of Steward Jan. 21, 1765; and died soon after[2].

William Tilley, gent. attorney at law, was unanimously elected Steward of the Court of Record of the said Borough in 1765. He was also coroner for the county; and died in 1797.

March 15, 1797, Henry Dalby, gent. attorney at law, was unanimously elected Steward of the Court of Record of this Borough, in the room of Mr. William Tilley, deceased. He is the present Steward (1809.)

TOWN CLERKS;

antiently styled "THE MAYOR'S CLERKS."

22 Edw. IV. Thomas Lynalls, the Mayor's Clerk, was made free; and Robert Gaddisby was the Mayor's Clerk in 12 Hen. VIII.

William Deathick seems to have been chosen, or admitted to his office, the last of February, 1571-2; for then his hand-writing begins in the Hall-book. He at first wrote his name Deadyck, but after 17 Eliz. Deathyck, and in 20 Eliz. Dethyck, and so continued for the future. He seems to have been the most careful person that ever had been in his office; and therefore, for his encouragement, 14 Eliz. April 14, it was agreed, that no apprentice should be bound within the liberties of Leicester but by indenture made by the Mayor's Clerk; for each pair of which he should have 16*d*. to be sealed and recorded before the Mayor by his Clerk; and he to have of the master 4*d*. And on Sept. 21, 14 Eliz. it was agreed, that the Chamberlains should pay the Mayor's Clerk four nobles per annum more wages than ever had been paid before. And whereas formerly he had used to have but 2*d*. for the swearing of freemen, in 17 Eliz. he was allowed 6*d*.; and, 29 April that year, for the better maintenance of the Mayor's Clerk, it was ordered, that every one chosen to be of the twenty-four should give him 12*d*. for administering the oath, and recording their names; and every one chosen to be of the forty-eight to pay him 6*d*.; and every one made free of any occupation by force of their ordinal to give him 6*d*. for the oath, and recording their names. And Dec. 14, 1603, at a meeting of the aldermen, it was agreed to give William Dethick, their Clerk, a gown at the town's charge. He was alive Sept. 21, 1608; but, soon after,

Roger Halfeilde was, at a meeting of the Aldermen, chosen to be Clerk to the Mayor, and Clerk of the Peace, so long as he should demean himself well in his office, upon condition that he should give such a sum of money to the town for the said offices as Mr. James Andrew then Mayor, Mr. Robert Herrick &c. should think meet.

Nicholas Bolyvant was chosen Feb. 12, 1620-1, at a meeting of the twenty-four, to be Town-clerk and Clerk of the Peace during their pleasure, for so long as he should demean himself well in their judgement, and upon condition that he should perform such other covenants as they, or the greater part of them, should think fit; and, Feb. 19, he was admitted and sworn a freeman, and to the said office. He was buried Dec. 17, 1635, at St. Martin's.

Richard Martin, esq. counsellor at law, Dec. 23, 1635, was chosen to succeed him; and the same day was sworn a freeman, and took the oath of his office. He was buried Feb. 20, 1639-40, at St. Martin's.

Edward Palmer, gent. was elected March 23 following, and took the oaths. In 1645-6, he gave great offence to the governor and committee of the garrison then in Leicester, for which they confined him, whereby the business of the Corporation suffered detriment; and, there being no prospect of making his peace, the mayor and his brethren, March 13, declared his place void; and Hugh Aston, gent. was the same day elected, and took the oaths required April 24, 1646; and Dec. 2, he was made Clerk of the Statutes; and July 27, 1647, he gave 1000*l*. security truly to discharge the said office. He died in 1652.

Abel Coles officiated in the place 1653; and June 2, 1654, he was chosen to be Town Clerk and Clerk of the Peace during pleasure; and July 7, at a common hall, was ordered to be Clerk of the Statutes, he giving security to save the town from any damage that might arise by his neglect, &c.

Edward Palmer, in virtue of a writ from the Upper Bench at Westminster, dated Feb. 12, was restored to his office of Clerk of the Peace April 16, 1658; and Oct. 24, 1660, was chosen to be Clerk of the Statutes, he giving security to save the town harmless; and June 7 following he was sworn, and the seal delivered to him. He died Feb. 27, 1663-4.

John Huckle was elected March 15, 1663-4.

John Cresswell, March 13, 1687-8, in virtue of the new charter, was chosen; but that being recalled, John Huckle was restored. He was buried at St. Martin's, March 10, 1694.

Edward Jevon, March 25, 1695, was elected, and sworn. Aug. 19, 1697, an order was made, that the Town-clerk should take but 6*s*. 8*d*. for a copy of the charter.

John Boley, Sept. 1, 1702, was elected in room of Mr. Jevon deceased, and sworn.—Jan. 2, 1703-4, he had a gratuity of 20*l*. paid him by the Chamberlains, for his extraordinary care and pains taken for the benefit of the Corporation; and March 3, 1704-5, it was ordered, that, taking with him one alderman and two common-council-men, he should have liberty, from time to time, to go into the charter-house, and inspect the writings there, and put them into order, that they might be more readily found, and the Town better know how their title stands in the lands they now enjoy, and whether they be not wronged of other lands and tenements which it is supposed belong to them; and June 1, 1704, at a common hall, he was ordered to be made free without paying any fine. Mr. Boley died in 1715; and was succeeded by Thomas Jordaine, gent. who was unanimously chosen Town-clerk June 15, 1715. He died June 9, 1745, aged 63; and his widow (who was daughter of Thomas Noble, esq.) May 5, 1788[3].

Sept. 27, 1745, Thomas Herrick, gent. was chosen Town-clerk, in the room of Thomas Jordaine, gent. deceased. He resigned in 1764; and died in 1766[4].

Oct. 5, 1764, John Heyrick[5], gent. was unanimously elected Town-clerk of this Borough, in the room of Mr. Thomas Herrick.—If this truly worthy character, whom I am proud to call my Friend, were not still living, the present paragraph would be very considerably extended.

Feb. 10, 1791, William Heyrick, gent. was unanimously elected Town-clerk of this Borough, in the room of John Heyrick, gent. his father, who had resigned that office. He is the present Town-clerk, 1809.

[1] On complaint to the House against sir Alexander Cave, then Sheriff, this return was amended; and sir George Hastings took his seat in the room of sir Thomas Beaumont. Journals, vol. I. p. 516.

[2] A petition of sir Henry Hastings against sir Thomas Hartopp, the Sheriff, for misconduct at this election, was presented to the House, March 25, 1626; and the Sheriff was reprimanded by the Speaker, May 4. See Journals, vol. I. pp. 841. 855.

[3] A petition was presented against this election, March 26, 1679, by Robert Johnson and others, on behalf of sir John Hartopp; but the House decided, April 15, in favour of the Sitting Members. See Journals, vol. IX. pp. 577. 596.

[4] A petition against this election was presented, May 9, 1679, by Henry Rayson, John Seagrave, and John Edwin, gentlemen, on behalf of themselves and other Freeholders (ibid. p. 616.); but the Parliament was dissolved in less than three weeks.

[5] On the 24th of February, in the Castle at Leicester, the writ for electing the Knights for that Shire being read, the freeholders did unanimously choose their old members, Benet lord Sherard, and sir John Hartopp baronet, their representatives to serve in the approaching Parliament to meet at Oxford. And after the said choice, the freeholders presented the following Address to them; which was audibly read in the Court by the Sheriff, as followeth: "We, the Freeholders of the County of Leicester, having chosen you to be our Representatives in the two last Parliaments, being highly sensible of the care you have taken to secure his Majesty's royal person, the Protestant Religion, our Liberties and Properties; as also your endeavours further to discover and prosecute the horrid Popish Plot spread over the Realm of England, and others of his Majesty's dominions; with your zealous promoting an happy union of all good Protestants in this land, not only by good and wholesome laws for that end, but by repealing those which were destructive to it; and especially for your persisting in the exclusion of James Duke of York, and all other Popish successors, from inheriting the Imperial Crown of England, which we esteem the only security under God of his Majesty's Person and Dominions; likewise your vindicating our fundamental right of petitioning his Majesty for frequent sitting of Parliaments, by your particular marks of displeasure laid upon the opposers of it. For all which, and other good laws you were about to make, we give you our most hearty thanks. And having now again unanimously chosen you for the ensuing Parliament, if you shall continue the prosecution of the afore-mentioned absolutely necessary things, we shall stand by you with our lives and fortunes." Protestant Mercury, March 2, 1680-1.

"Harborough, March 2. We had no opposition at all in our County against sir John Hartopp; for we were so unanimous and hearty in our choice, that sir John was not only without any charge at his election, but the expence of his journey hither, and back again to London, was likewise discharged by the Freeholders: but, as sir John came back to this town, a certain debauched fellow (said to be backed and set on by some others), who had been drinking hard with some gentlemen all Sunday afternoon, and all the night, after sir John was come into the town, came out with his man, swearing and cursing at sir John; and when a neighbour of our town rebuked him, the villain discharged a pistol with a brace of bullets at him, which missed his head very narrowly, swearing—That all the Fanaticks should be sent to the devil with bullets ere long."—Smith's Protestant Intelligencer, March 10, 1680-1.

[1] Knighted at Belvoir, Aug. 6, 1619.

[2] Aug. 23, 1642, a Committee was appointed by the House of Commons, to consider of the King's displacing and new-placing Sheriffs of Counties. Journals, vol. II. p. 734.—Nov. 21. The proper officers were enjoined, not to make out any commission or patent for electing of Sheriffs, or dedimus potestatem for swearing of Sheriffs, or writs for discharge of old Sheriffs, unless by order of the House. Ibid. p. 857.—"The king nominated Sheriffs; but they were not allowed by the parliament to be sworn, as not being recommended by the judges; and because they were uniformly disaffected to the parliament, and the present good of the state." England's Memorable Accident, Tuesday, Nov. 22, 1642.—Dec. 1. The House ordered copies to be sent in of the new commissions to the new Sheriffs solely nominated by his Majesty. Journals, vol. II. p. 870.

[3] Journals, vol. III. p. 354.—Aug. 2, 1644, he had a dispensation from that part of his oath which relates to not stirring out of the county; and Sept. 24, had liberty granted him to come to London. Ibid. pp. 576. 638.

[4] He raised the posse comitatus for the king against the parliament. Journals, vol. III. p. 650.

[5] Nov. 13, 1644. The several members for counties were directed to nominate three persons fit for Sheriff for each county; of whom one to be elected by the House. Journals, vol. III. p. 694.

[6] Journals, vol. IV. p. 47.

[7] Ibid. p. 732.

[8] Ibid. vol. V. p. 360.

[9] Ibid. vol. VI. p. 85.

[10] Ibid. p. 319. He had liberty, Jan. 28, 1649-50, to go out of the county upon his urgent affairs, as his occasions should require. Ibid. p. 350.

[11] Ibid. vol. VII. p. 548. He was afterwards of Lodington: where see an account of him, vol. III. p. 329.

[12] "Bis vicecomes." See his and his son's epitaphs at Wanlip, vol. III. p. 1099.

[14] Ordered into custody Feb. 7, and discharged Feb. 22. Journals, vol. VII. pp. 836. 848.

ARCHDEACONS OF LEICESTER[1].

This Dignity consists only in the perquisites of its office; and pays now to the Bishop, for exercising of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, annually, 22*l.* The amount of the First Fruits is 87*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*

Ralph is the first Archdeacon whom I find noticed. He was instituted by Bishop Remigius in 1092.

Godfrey succeeded about 1100. The next was Walter, who held it about 1120.

Robert de Querceto, or Chesneto, was from this dignity made Bishop of Lincoln in 1147[2]. He appeared frequently in arms during the contests between King Stephen and Matilda[3]. In Stow's Survey of London, he is called Robert de Curars[4].

Hugh[5] held it 1151; as did

Baldric de Sigillo, 1158 and 1189[6].

Roger[7] de Rolveston, 1191. In 1194, he was concerned in regulating certain matters at York. Epistola Cælestini Papæ contra Gaufridum Ebor. Archiepiscopum. Haimoni decano Lincolnie & Rogero archidiacono Leicestrie, &c.[8]; and was one of the delegates appointed to arbitrate between Abp. Hubert and the Monks of Christchurch, about the founding of a College of Canons at Lambeth[9]. He was made Dean of Lincoln 1195. Hoveden gives a relation of the appearance, in a dream, of Hugo Bp. of Lincoln to Dean Roger, fifteen days after the death of that prelate.

William about 1199; so that he was in the sede vacante. Burton, p. 96; but was soon gone.

C. sede vacante also, about 1207; Burton, pp. 98, 248, 278. He is omitted by Willis.

Reginald occurs in 1211.

Raymond de Bleis in 1212, 1214, and 1222; and William Glamdi[10], 1226 and 1228.

The celebrated Robert Grosseteste[11], who resigned it in 1231 for the archdeaconry of Chester; and was made Bp. of Lincoln in 1230.

William de Drayton, collated 1231.

John de Basing, or Basingstoke[12], where he was born, the famous Author of that name, was first of Oxford, then went to several foreign universities[13]; occurs Archdeacon of Leicester 1238; Archdeacon of Chester 1247, and held it with that of Leicester though this was not agreeable to canon.

Solomon succeeded in 1252; and held it in 1254.

Roger de Saxenherst about 1274. He died in 1294.

Roger de Martival[14], S. T. P. son of sir Anketin de Martival, was collated Jan. 16, 1294. He and his father founded the college of Noseley[15] in this county in 1273. He was Archdeacon of Huntingdon 1288, and Chancellor of Oxford; occurs Archdeacon Jan. 10, 1307[16]; and was made Dean of Lincoln in 1310; Bp. of Sailsbury 1315; and died March 14, 1329.

Raymond de Fargis; admitted Prebendary of Ketton 1308[17]; instituted Archdeacon Oct. 31, 1310. In his time the following singular request was made to the Clergy of this Diocese:

"Litera Episcopi, pro aliquo subsidio sibi concesso.

"Henricus[18], permissione divinâ, Lincolniensis episcopus, dilectis in Christi filiis, clero archidiaconatûs Leycestrensis, nostre diœcesis, ac singulis personis ejusdem, salutem, cum abundantiâ gratie, & benedictione Salvatoris. Nuper vobis (pro diversis negotiis, ex parte nostrâ, vobis exponendis apud Leycestriam convocatis, & expositâ inter cetera vobis in communi per dilectos filios magistros Richardum de Stratton, canonicum ecclesie nostre Lincolniensis, & Johannem de Ayleston, rectorem ecclesie de Denton, nuncios nostros ad vos destinatos, indigentiâ nobis (absque culpâ nostrâ) notoriè imminente; iidem magister Richardus & Johannes vos (ex parte nostrâ) humiliter requisiverunt & rogârunt, ut nostre indigentie hujusmodi subvenire dignaremini (cum ad hoc subsit manifesta & rationabilis causa, que vos latere nequit) de aliquo auxilio moderato; & vos qui tunc presentes extititis, pro majori parte, ostendentes singillatim vos in hâc nobis benevolos, ad impendendum nobis moderatum auxilium hujusmodi, & paratos, sicùt dicti nuncii nobis retulerunt (de quo grates vobis referimus quas valemus); Propter tamen absentiam quamplurium ejusdem cleri, qui tunc non interfuerant, vos eisdem nunciis nostris iterum dare responsum in communi non decere asseruistis, dictis absentibus inconsultis; Nos igiter, conjicientes & presumentes (ex premissis) vestre benevolentie exuberantiam non minus fervere erga nos quam ceterorum nostre diœcesis, qui (sue gratie) nobis subvenire longiflue, tam liberaliter concesserunt; vestram caritatem exoramus, quatenus vestrum gratum responsum ad premissa dilectis nobis magistris Hugoni de Walmesford, & . . . . . Officiali Archidiaconi Leycestrensis, vel uni eorum, nomine nostro; ita quòd (si non in communi hoc volueritis) singuli vestrûm singulariter dare velitis; ac voluntatem vestram (quoad premissa in omnibus) eisdem, vel eorum uni, dignemini plenitèr intimâre, ut sic de zelo vestro erga nos certiùs instrui valeamus. Diu & feliciter in Domino vobis & vestrûm singulis salus vigeat, & augmentum crescat gratie salutaris. Datum apud Lafford, pridie calendar' Januarii, anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo vicesimo quarto[19]."

Dominus Reymundus Sante Marie, nove dioc' cardinalis, fuit archidiaconus Leyc' 10 kal' Maii, 1340[20]. This Raymond died in 1346.

Henry de Chaddesden, Archdeacon of Stow 1338; admitted archdeacon March 14, 1346; prebendary of Saudiacre, Lichfield cathedral, Aug. 10, 1350[21]; and was prebendary of St. Martin's, Lincoln, which he exchanged for a portion of Waddesden church, Bucks[22]. He died in 1354; and was buried in St. Paul's cathedral, with this inscription:

"Orate pro anima Henrici de Chaddesden, Archidiaconi Leicestriæ, qui quidem Henricus obiit 8° Maii, 1354."

In 1355, a patent passed for the founding a chantry, consisting of a warden and two chaplains, in the church of Chaddesden, co. Derby, for the soul of Henry Chaddesden, late archdeacon of Leicester[23].

[1] "This archdeaconry contains 200 parishes, out of which were ejected by the parliament sequestrators, in 1641 and afterwards, 58 ministers; and in 1662, by the Bartholomew act, 32 or thereabouts. All the first set were exemplarily good, succeeded by many of a different cast, as players, broken attornies &c.; yet, in less than 20 years, when these were to be turned out, they were all of the first water." William Donne[1], LL. D. was collated May 12, 1354; and in 1373 received from the Knights Hospitallers of Rothley 2l. 13*s.* 4*d.* as an annual rent, pro jurisdictione infra parochiam de Rotheley[2].

On Dr. Donne's quitting this archdeaconry[3], the King granted it to John de Bottlesham, 1385. He was admitted prebendary of Crackpole, St. Mary, Oct. 4, 1386[4]; of Milton Eccles, Jan. 18, 1389[5]; and of Brampton Jan. 15, 1393[6].

The pope thinking proper to confer this archdeaconry on Porcelinus de Ursinis, a Cardinal Priest, Bottlesham gave up his pretensions, and obtained a prebend at York; was made in 1410 Bishop of Rochester; and was also Master of St. Peter's college, Cambridge.

Porcelinus held this archdeaconry till 1392; when, being displaced,

John Elvet was admitted to it, on the King's donation, Aug. 4, 1392. He was admitted prebendary of Ewithington, Hereford, June 11, 1395; of South Newbald, York, Dec. 5, 1395; and of Leighton Bisard in 1400[7]. He died in 1404, being then a prebendary also of Sarum and Lincoln.

Richard Elvet succeeded; and in 1408 a matter in dispute concerning jurisdiction, between him and Philip de Repyngdon Bp. of Lincoln, was referred to arbitration[8]. Oct. 9, 1424, he exchanged a prebend in the church of Lincoln with John Leghburne, rector of Seggesfelde, co. Durham[9]. The time of his death does not appear; but he was succeeded by Thomas Barnesley, who had been prebendary of St Margaret's 1421. He was also dean of the college of Stoke Clare, co. Suffolk, the statutes of which he formed[10], and where he was buried. He held that dignity 40 years, as he did this till his death in 1454; when

Richard Ewen is said to be collated to it, Aug. 14, 1454. He was removed to the archdeaconry of Lincoln in 1455; and was succeeded by William Wytham, LL. D. who had been archdeacon of Stow in 1454. He died July 16, 1472; and was buried in Wells cathedral, where he was dean, with this epitaph, long since defaced:

Insignis legum doctor, decus atque decanus
  Ecclesiæ gemma; cujus hic una fuit,
Altera Leicestrensis simul archidiaconus illuc
  Willielmus Witham nobilis hic recubat.
Dapsilis ac hilaris fuit hospitio, miserorum
  Solamen, culto justitiæ requies.
Justorum Sp .... bonitatis tutor, et auctor
  Pacis, consilii fons, pugil ecclesiæ.
Hunc mors eripuit vitam tribuens morienti
  Umbra mi .... at mors modo vita mori
Anno milleno C. quater LX duodeno
  In fetodeno clauditur hic tumulo."

Roger Rotheram, LL. D. succeeded in 1472, in which year he occurs also as archdeacon of Rochester, which he probably then resigned, though Mr. Le Neve places his instalment not till Nov. 11, 1475. He was also prebendary of St. Margaret, Leicester; and died at Rochester in 1477. His successor,

John Moreton, LL. D. was installed by proxy (as Rotheram had been) Jan. 3, 1477. He was archdeacon also of Huntingdon, Derby, and Norfolk, and Master of the Rolls. He was next year made Bishop of Ely; and succeeded by Richard Lavendyr, admitted likewise by his proxy, Oct. 5, 1485. He was chancellor and commissary to John bishop of Rochester, Oct. 17, 1478, as appears by the will of Thomas Marchant. He was rector of Hungat Episcopi, and patronist of Alveston, ult. Sept. 1486; and died in 1504. He was buried in the chancel of St. Peter and St. Paul's church in the town of Bucks, where he was prebendary, and had an inscription on his grave-stone, long since defaced. His successor was

William Sparke, M. A. collated March 18, 1507. He was of Cambridge, but incorporated M. A. at Oxford December 1512[11]; and was succeeded by Henry Wilcocks, installed May 1, 1515. He proceeded LL. D. in 1500; and was Principal of the Civil Law School in St. Edmund's parish, Oxford, and deputy to William Warham, Master of the Rolls[12]. He died in 1518, being also prebendary of Croperdy; and was succeeded by Richard Mawdley, or Mawdlen, M. A. installed May 29, 1518. He took the degree of B. D. July 17, 1529. He was Vicar-general to Bishop Smith; and was a zealous preacher against the Lutherans. He died in 1530, being also prebendary of Tame.

Feb. 16, 1520, a commission was issued to Master Richard Brokysby, in decretis bacaulareo, and Richard Parker clerk, to visit the clergy and people (clerum et populum) of the archdeaconry of Leicester[13].

Stephen Gardiner, D. C. L. 1520; master of Trinity hall, Cambridge, 1525; archdeacon of Norwich 1529; and of Leicester, in which latter he was installed March 31, 1531: but he kept it not long, being made Bishop of Winchester the same year. Though he subscribed to all the alterations in Religion under king Edward VI. he was still regarded as a secret enemy to the Reformation; and in 1547 was imprisoned in the Fleet, and in 1548 in the Tower; and soon after, Feb. 14, 1549-50, was deprived of his bishoprick. On the accession of Queen Mary, he was restored to his bishoprick; made lord chancellor; and became, in fact, prime minister. He was distinguished for his extensive learning, insinuating address, and profound policy; the master-piece of which was the treaty of marriage betwixt Philip and Mary, which was an effectual bar to the ambitious designs of Philip. His religious principles appear to have been more flexible than his political, which were invariably fixed to his own interest. He was a persecutor of those tenets to which he had subscribed, and in defence of which he had written. He was author of a treatise "De Verâ Obedientiâ;" had a great hand in the famous book, intituled, "The Erudition of a Christian Man;" wrote an "Apology for Holy Water," &c.[14]; and died Nov. 12, 1555, æt. 72.

Edward Fox, S. T. P. provost of king's college, Cambridge, was installed Sept. 27, 1531; made Bishop of Hereford in 1535[15]. He was the author of "Libri de verâ differentiâ Regal. Potestatis & Ecclesiasticæ;" and died in 1538.

Peter Ithell, Thomas Trys, and Robert Wingfield, were appointed, by the King's writ, Jan. 30, 1534-5, to take the ecclesiastical survey of the county of Leicester.

Edmund Bonner, LL. D. installed Oct. 17, 1535. He was bastard son of George Savage, parson of Davenham in Cheshire, base son to sir John Savage junior, of Clifton, co. Cestr. Edmund's mother was Elizabeth Frodsham, first married to one Edmund Bonner, a sawyer with Mr. Armingham, who had other children by her afterwards, and dwelt at Potter's Henley, co. Worcester[16]. Edmund Bonner (afterwards Bishop of London), sat in the Convocation, as Archdeacon of Leicester, in 1536, when the Clergy inscribed the instrument of King Henry's divorce from Queen Catharine; of whom Fuller thus writes: "As for Edmund Bonner, Archdeacon of Leicester, present, and active in this Convocation, I may say Bonner was no Bonner YET, but a perfect Cromwellist, and as forward as any to promote his designs[17]."

William More, B.D. who had been consecrated Suffragan Bishop of Colchester Oct. 20, 1536, was installed Sept. 4, 1539. He was prebendary of Gerendale in the church of York; and held the priory of Walden (where Audley Inn now stands) in commendam, but surrendered it in 1539; obtained a pension and this archdeaconry Oct. 20, 1540; and was succeeded by Thomas Robertson, S.T.P. who was born at or in the neighbourhood of Wakefield in Yorkshire; and was at first of Queen's college, Oxford; afterwards of Magdalen college, where he obtained a fellowship, and was master of the adjoining school, his character being that of a correct grammarian. He greatly exceeded his predecessors in the education of his pupils; added Quæ genus to Lilly's Grammar; and was the author of several grammatical works. In 1539, he was treasurer of the church of Salisbury. It is said the congregation of Regents were supplicated by him, for admission to the reading of the Sentences, being then esteemed Flos et decus Oxonii. In 1540, by the interest of Langford Bp. of Lincoln, he obtained the archdeaconry of Leicester; was collated Feb. 19, and installed March 5. He had been rector of St. Laud's church at Sherrington, Bucks; was in Convocation July 7, 1540; and one of the Committee appointed to enquire into the validity of King Henry the Eighth's marriage with Anne of Cleves[1]. In 1546, he was instituted vicar of Wakefield; on which he resigned his treasurership; and in 1549 he was named among those who were appointed by king Edward VI. to compose the Church Liturgy. In July 1558, he obtained the deanery of Durham; and Queen Mary, who greatly respected him for his learning, would have nominated him to a bishoprick, which he modestly refused. On Queen Elizabeth's accession to the Crown, he was forced to resign the deanery of Durham, to make room for Dr. Robert Horne's restoration. He resigned the archdeaconry of Leicester, to avoid the disgrace of an ejection; and though a bitter adversary to reformation, was overlooked, as some thought, on account of his lameness; but Willis[2] says he was taken into custody. He is mentioned by Strype[3], in "Lists of the names of Popish Recusants, late Dignitaries of the Church." "Dr. Robinson (or Robertson, Archdeacon of Leicester, and) late Dean of Durham, is excused by his lameness; one thought to do much hurt in Yorkshire[4]." On Horn's promotion to the see of Winchester, Dr. Robertson might have been restored to his deanery, if he would have taken the oath of supremacy; but he refused. What afterwards became of him, our authorities are silent[5].

This dignity lay void till Dec. 24, 1560; when Richard Barber, LL.D. (who had been installed Archdeacon of Bedford[6]) was installed here. "Mr. Richard Barber, Chancellor to the Reverend Father in God Nicholas, by the Grace of God, Bishop of Lincoln, is now Archdeacon of Leicester, and hath the jurisdiction of the said archdeaconry, and dwelleth at Lincoln. July 28, 1563[7]." Dr. Barber subscribed in Convocation, Feb. 5, 1562, to the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion[8]; elected warden of All-Souls college, Oxford, April 10, 1565, and resigned Oct. 25, 1571; was one of the Bishop of Lincoln's commissioners in visiting Baliol college, March 4, 1569[9]. He died in 1588, and was buried at Yoxall, co. Stafford, where he was rector, with this inscription:

> "Here lyeth the body of Richard Barber, Doctor of Laws, born in this county; sometime fellow, after elected warden, of All Souls in Oxon, April 10, 1565; which he resigned Oct. 25, 1571; whence he retired to his parsonage at Yoxhall, and there died, Feb. 15, 1589."

Hugh Blythe, D.D. succeeded. He had been elected to King's college, Cambridge, 1559; was rector of Appleby in this county: schoolmaster of Eton about 1572; in which year, Aug. 23, he obtained a canonry of Windsor. He was installed archdeacon May 13, 1589; resigned in 1591; and died in 1610.

Robert Johnson was descended from a respectable family, which, by an alliance with a Welsh heiress, had added an estate at Clun, on the borders of Wales, to their paternal property in Lincolnshire. He was the younger son (by a daughter of Henry Lacey of Stamford, esq.) of Maurice Johnson, esq.[10] thrice alderman of Stamford[11], and member of parliament for that borough in 1523, with David Cecil[12].

The Alderman was a merchant of the Staple; and his picture, painted by Holbein, is at Aysough-fee hall, having the order of the Bath round his neck.

By the custom of Burgh-English, Robert Johnson inherited his father's property in Stamford, while his elder brother[13] succeeded to the lands at Clun. In his minority he was entrusted by his father's will to the guardianship of Robert Smith, of Stanground, in the county of Huntingdon, who had married a sister of the testator. He was educated at the grammar-school of Peterborough, and was thence transferred to Clare hall. After which he repaired for three years to Paris, and other foreign Universities, for the purpose of study, by licence under Queen Elizabeth's own hand. He likewise travelled into Ireland. And, on his final return to this country, he was made Chaplain Examiner to the Lord Keeper Sir Nicholas Bacon. Here he employed conscientiously and successfully the opportunities of usefulness which his situation afforded; and, while the Church was still struggling with half-conquered difficulties, and particularly with a want of sufficient ministers, he recommended to the Lord Keeper a succession of learned and godly men, to supply the vacant cures. About this time, having removed from Clare hall, he was fellow of Trinity college; and was M.A. of Cambridge. In 1564 he was incorporated to the same degree at Oxford; and about 1591 was elected an honorary fellow of Jesus college, in the same University. He was also twice nominated to stalls in the cathedral of Rochester, which he twice resigned. About the same time he was made a prebendary of Peterborough; and from 1570 to 1575 he filled a stall in Norwich. In 1572 he was instituted to a canonry of Windsor; and in 1575, when he left the Lord Keeper's family, he retired for the remainder of his life to his parsonage of North Luffenham, to which he had been inducted in the preceding year. He subsequently proceeded B.D. at Cambridge; and in 1591 was made Archdeacon of Leicester, which closed the list of his ecclesiastical preferments.

On his settlement in Rutlandshire he found a great deficiency in the means of instruction and relief. The only charitable foundation which existed, even in name, was the Hospital of St. John and St. Anne, which had been founded at Okeham, by William Dalby, in the reign of Henry the Fifth. Its funds, however, were not only neglected and mismanaged, but, on the pretence of some superstitious additions of obits and lamps to the establishment, were begged as concealed, and would have been entirely confiscated, and the buildings destroyed for the value of the materials, if Robert Johnson had not bought the patronage; and then, surrendering it into the Queen's hands, received it again (through the intervention of his noble friend Lord Burleigh) to the original uses of the foundation. Fuller relates, that Robert Johnson well knew how to work on the liberality of others; and, by his representations of the benefits of the work, wrought upon many to contribute largely to the execution of certain other charitable foundations in the county. Thus he collected "money, or money's worth of timber, stones, &c." for the completion and endowment of the schools and hospitals of Okeham and Uppingham, till, in the 29th year of Elizabeth, the Queen, upon the entreaty of Robert Johnson, founded these schools and hospitals, and established a corporation for the government thereof, by the description of the "Governors of the goodds, possessions, and revenues of the Free Grammar Scholes of Robert Johnson, clarke, &c."

[10] Maurice Johnson, esq. the founder of the Gentlemen's Society at Spalding, claimed collateral consanguinity to Robert the archdeacon and his father Maurice, as well as to Ben Jonson. If the Poet and the subject of this memoir were related to one common line, they must have been related to each other.

[11] The title of the then chief magistrate.

[12] Grandfather to the Lord Treasurer Burleigh.

[13] The elder brother was Geoffrey fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge, 1562, and miniser at Leicester, where he died. His son and heir, Samuel, sold the lands at Clun.

From this title, and from the general tenor of tradition, we may infer that Robert Johnson was (though not, as he is sometimes represented, the sole Founder, yet) certainly the most considerable benefactor to the original establishments. By him and by others they were subsequently farther endowed, till, at his death, they possessed a very adequate income, which is now (1810) increased to the amount of 1400*l. per annum*.

In the schools Latin, Greek, and Hebrew were directed to be taught; and in the hospitals 22 or 24 poor men received "comfortable sustentation." By the enlargement however of their means, 96 are now on the establishment, at 5 l. per annum each. The whole is under the direction of the Founder's right heir, George William Johnson, of Witham on the Hill, Lincolnshire, esq. hereditary Patron, and eight official, eight lay, and eight clerical governors. The Statutes of the foundation are abridged, in Magna Britannia (Rutlandshire); and are printed at full length, Stamford, 1759, 8vo.

In addition to his share in these establishments, Robert Johnson left certain other benefactions in Rutlandshire; and bequeathed an annual stipend to a preacher at St. Paul's Cross; several exhibitions[1] to students at those Colleges in Cambridge with which he himself had been more immediately connected; and 100*l. per annum* to St. John's College; which was afterwards commuted by the family, by the purchase of land for the College.

Throughout his life he lived in the exercise of dignified hospitality and extensive charities. Yet he added largely to his paternal property in Lincolnshire and Rutlandshire; and, though never dignified higher than the archdeaconry of Leicester (says Fuller), and though thus liberal in his benefactions, he left to his family an estate of 1000*l. per annum*. Besides this, his personal property in the house at the time of his death was very considerable. By an inventory, taken a few days afterwards, it appears that his heir found, in different shapes, 5900*l.* (of which 522*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* was in ready money), a sum on the whole amounting at the present rate to little less than 30,000*l.*

Robert Johnson, the pious and learned Archdeacon of Leicester, closed a long and useful life at his parsonage of North Luffenham, about the 85th year of his age.

On the 25th of July 1625, he was buried, in the chancel of the church, where a small brass, fixed on a stone, is thus inscribed:

> "Robart Jhonson, Bachelor of Divinitie, a painful preacher, parson of North Luffenham, > had a godlie care of Religion, and a charitable minde to the poore.
> He erected a faire free Grammar-schole in Okeham.
> He erected a faire free Grammar-schoole in Uppingham.
> He appointed to each of his schooles a schoolemaster and an usher.
> He erected the Hospitalle of Christe in Okeham.
> He erected the Hospitalle of Christe in Uppingham.
> He procured for them a corporation and a mortmain of fower hundred marks, > Whereby well-disposed people maie give unto them as God shall move their hartes.
> He bought landes of Quene Elizabeth towards the maintenance of them.
> He provided place in each of the Hospitalles for XXIIII poore people.
> He recovered, bought, and procured, the olde Hospitalle of William Dalby in Okeham, > and caused it to be renewed, established, and confirmed, > which before was found to be confiscate and concealed, > wherein divers poore people he releaved.
> He was also beneficiall to the towne of North Luffenham, > and also to the towne of Stamforde, where he was born of worshipful parents.
> It is the grace of God to give a man a wise harte, to laie up his treasure in Heaven.
> Theis be good frvites and effectes of a justifieing faith, and of a trew profession of religion, > and a good example to all others to be benefactors to theis and such like good works;
> that so they may glorifie God, and leave a blessed remembrance behinde them, > to the comfort and profite of all posteritie.
> All the glorie, honor, praise, and thankes, be unto God for evermore, Amen.
> Sic luceat lux vestra. Let youre light so shine."

He was thrice married: first, to Susanna, only sister and heiress of Jeremy Davers of Cambridge, who died without issue; secondly, to Mary, only sister and presumptive representative of the Heads of Hillingdon and Wootton, by whom he had his only child, Abraham, born at North Luffenham, on the 6th of July 1577; thirdly (and at an advanced period of life), Margaret, widow of ..... Wheeler, and sister of Dr. Lilly. In all which connexions he was singularly happy.

His only son received from his father's recommendation two wives. The first became the mother of Isaac Johnson; who succeeded to his grandfather's estates; and who, early in life, married the Lady Arabella Fiennes (daughter of the Earl of Lincoln); with whom, in 1629, he embarked for America, in the great colonization of New England; and with whom he died there, soon after landing, in the same year; the most considerable of the Colonists in his pecuniary interest in the enterprize, and the most popular. Around him, by their dying requests, were buried as they fell, those who had followed him in life, and whom the diseases of an uncleared country hurried to the grave, till his tomb formed the common and patriarchal centre of the cemetery. John Hampden was his executor; and his father and brothers, Abraham, Samuel, and Ezechiel Johnson (the latter of whom carried on the line of his family), were his heirs. His father's second wife, the mother of these and many other brothers, was Elizabeth, the only child of Laurence Chaderton, fellow of Christ Church, Cambridge, one of the translators of the Bible, 1611; prebendary of Lincoln; and first master of Emanuel College 1584, which he resigned in 1602, but continued chiefly to reside there till his death, in 1640, in the 95th year of his age.

Whilst Mr. Johnson was archdeacon, a man was tried at Leicester, at the Lent assizes 1 Jac. I.

[1] Amongst these, were four exhibitions to Sidney Sussex college, and some to St. John's.

for digging up dead folks, and stealing their winding sheets[1].

Richard Pilkington, descended of an antient family in Lancashire, was, at 17 years of age, sent to Cambridge till M.A. and, retiring to Queen's college, Oxford, was incorporated in that degree 1599, and in 1600 was B. D. and seven years after D. D. He was collated to this archdeaconry Aug. 16, 1625, being then vice-rector of Hambleton, in Bucks. He preached and wrote against the Papists; and was buried at Hambleton, in the middle of September 1631, at which time there was the most dreadful storm of wind, thunder, and lightning, that was ever known in those parts. He has no monument; and was succeeded by William Warr, who paid First Fruits for it Oct. 14, 1631; to whom succeeded

Henry Ferne, S.T.P. rector of Medborne in this county 1639, and master of Trinity college, Cambridge[2]. On his being made Dean of Ely[3],

Robert Hitch[4], S.T.P. afterwards Dean of York, succeeded, June 18, 1661, and was installed July 13, 1661. He was present in the Convocation that passed the Book of Common Prayer, and signed it Dec. 20, 1661[5]. He resigned this archdeaconry next year, in exchange for that of East Riding in the church of York, with

Clement Bretton[6], S.T.P. who was installed Sept. 7, 1662. He was fellow of Sidney college in Cambridge[7], and rector of Langton in this county[8]. He died in 1669, and was buried at Uppingham, without any inscription. He was succeeded by William Outram[9], S.T.P. installed July 30, 1669, on the death of Breton. He published five Sermons, on Faith, Providence, and other subjects, 8vo, 1680; Twenty Sermons preached on several Occasions, 8vo, 1697. He died Aug. 23, 1679; and was buried in Westminster Abbey, with this inscription:

> "Propè jacet
> Gulielmus Outram, S.T.P.
> ex agro Derbiensi collegiorum apud
> Cantabrigienses S. & individuæ Trinitatis &
> Christi socius, hujus ecclesiæ canonicus & > Leycestrie Archidiaconus, Theologus > consummatus & omnibus numeris absolutus; > Scriptor nervosus & accuratus; concionator > egregius & assiduus; primò in agro > Lincoln', postea Londini, et tandem apud
> S. Margaretam Westmon', ubi confecit > postremum vitæ suæ cursum magnâ > cum laude nec minori fructu: Sed in > tantis laboribus & animi contentione dum > sacrarum literarum & Sanctorum Patrum > studio ardebat, ut in renum dolores > inciderit; quibus diu afflictus, & tandem > fractus, æquissimo animo è vita discessit, > Augusti 23°, anno Domini MDCLXXIX, > postquam impleverat annum > quinquagesimum quartum."

On the base:

> "Post longum religiosæ senectutis decursum annorum, > etiam 42° viduitatem, hic requiescit Jane uxor > Gul' Outram, S.T.P. propter votam optimo semper > consilio institutam, pietate erga Deum, > fidem erga amicos, charitatem erga egenos, > cœlo dilecta, chara multis, omnibus insignis, > defunctis ad honorem vivis ad exemplum.
> Ob 4° die Octobris, 1721."

Francis Meres[10], M.A. succeeded, being collated Sept. 10, and installed Nov. 3, 1679. He was rector of Misterton 1666, and of Lutterworth 1678; died Aug. 27, 1683, æt. 77; and was buried at Misterton[11].

Byrom Eaton[12], S.T.P. was collated Sept. 3, and installed Sept. 5, 1683. He died in 1703; and was buried at Newnham Courtney, near Oxford, where he was rector, without any monument; and was succeeded by John Rogers, M.A. collated Nov. 29, 1703. He died in 1715[13].

David Trimnell, M.A. (brother to the Bishop of Winchester) succeeded, being collated May 17, 1715. He was born May 20, 1675[14]. Dr. Trimnell is mentioned, in the History of Lambeth Palace[15], as chaplain to Abp. Wake. He seems to have been in the same office under Dr. Wake whilst Bishop of Lincoln, as he was possessed of these benefices in the disposal of the prelates of that see; the rectory of Stoke Hammond in Bucks; the prebends of Tarenton 1710, and Castor 1712, in the church of Lincoln; and the archdeaconry of Leicester May 17, 1715, which was a few months before his Patron's translation to Canterbury; by whom he was presented, in 1718, to the prebend of Kelsey, and also to the precentorship in Lincoln cathedral, probably an option at the consecration of Bishop Gibson. Dr. Trimnell published an Assize Sermon, 8vo, 1714; Text, Rom. xiii. 4.

On a flat stone in Lincoln cathedral, near the West door, is this inscription:

> "Sacred to the memory of > the Rev. David Trimnell, S.T.P. > rector of Stoke in Bucks 48 years, > prebendary of Castor 48 years, > archdeacon of Leicester 41 years, > and precentor of this church, and > prebendary of Kildesley, 38 years; > who died May 28, 1756, aged 81 years."

John Taylor, LL. D. collated June 1756, on the death of Dr. Trimnell. He was of Christ Church, Oxford; M.A. 1742; B. and D.D. 1752. He obtained the archdeaconry of Bedford in 1744; and was also prebendary of Aylesbury, which he exchanged, April 28, 1747, for the rectory of St. Mary Aldermary, London; which he held till the time of his death, in 1772. He published a Sermon, preached at the Consecration of Bishops John Thomas, Lisle, and Trevor; Phil. ii. 15, 16. 4to, preached April 1, 1744.

James Bickham, M.A. fellow of Emanuel college, Cambridge, was presented by that Society, in 1761, to the rectory of Loughborough. He died Dec. 23, 1785[16].

Andrew Burnaby, D.D. elected into Westminster college in 1748, but removed from that school; was of Queen's college, Cambridge; instituted vicar of Greenwich 1769; and collated to the archdeaconry of Leicester in 1786. Of this venerable and respectable Divine (who still does honour to the situation he so ably fills) some account has been already given under Bagrave[17]. He has since printed, for the use of particular friends, a very small impression of "Journal of a Tour to Corsica in the year 1766. By the Rev. A. Burnaby, D.D. at that time Chaplain to the British Factory at Leghorn. With a Series of original Letters from General Paoli to the Author, referring to the principal Events which have taken place in that Island, from 1766 to 1802. With explanatory Notes. 1804." He has also published, in 1805, an octavo volume of "Occasional Sermons and Charges," most of which had before appeared in separate and detached publications; a form in which they were likely to be preserved only in the collections of the curious; but they will now make a part of every well-chosen Theological Library. The volume contains XVIII Sermons, delivered at various places, and chiefly on public occasions, between the years 1764 and 1782; Four Charges to the Archdeaconry of Leicester; a Petition from the Clergy of that Archdeaconry (proposed, but not accepted) on the Slave Trade, 1788; and a Letter to the Clergy on the same Subject, 1792.

Sessions held 7 Jan. 163..

The steeple hath been heretofore a fair square steeple; but the foundation not being good, for that it was made of soft mouldering stone, it so happened that the said steeple was, by a most violent tempest of wind, blown down; so that with the fall the middle aile, and North side of the church, were so shaken and decayed in the main timber, that it cannot be long upheld. Charge, 510*l.*[1]

WIGSTON'S, OR THE NEW HOSPITAL (Plate XXXIV.)

This is the Hospital which in Mr. Burton, and in the Catalogue of Religious Houses in the Monasticon, is called St. Ursula's, it having originally been endowed as a chantry for two priests in the collegiate church of our Lady in the Newark, in honour of the Virgin Mary, St. Catharine, and St. Ursula; and owed its foundation to the benevolence of William Wigston, a merchant of the Staple of Calais, who was chosen mayor of Leicester in 1499, and again in 1510; and who, May 16, 1511, in conjunction with Thomas Wigston clerk, Roger Wigston[1], and William Colte [or Bolte], obtained the king's licence for that purpose, as has already been noticed under the History of that College[2]; where the letters patent of king Henry VIII. are also given at large[3]; and as will more fully appear by the following document:

"This indenture quadripartite, made Jan. 20, 1512-13, 4 Hen. VIII. between William Wigston the younger, merchant of the Staple of Calys, of the first part; John Yonge, dean of the new collegiate church of our Lady of Leicester, of the second part; and Richard Pexall, abbot of the monastery of our Lady in the Meadows of Leicester aforesaid, and the convent of the same, of the third part; and Richard Gyllot, mayor of the town of Leicester, and burgess of the same, on the fourth part. Whereas the said William Wigston, by the special agreement and licence of the said dean and canons, at his proper costs and charges, hath newly builded and erected a mansion-place, and inclosed the same mansion with a garden thereto adjoining, within the precinct and walls of the said College, for the mansion-place of and for two chantry priests, by him, with God's grace, to be founded within the same College, to the honour of Almighty God, our Blessed Lady, Saint Ursula, and Saint Catharine; which mansion and garden being set between the mansion-place and garden of Mr. Thomas Wigston, now one of the prebendaries of the said College, of the prebend called The Thirteen Prebends, on the East part, and the Castle-way on the West part, and extendeth from the church-yard of the said College on the South unto the garden of the Rood-house on the North part: And, for the foundation of the aforesaid chantry and chantry priests, the aforesaid William Wigston hath obtained the letters patent of our foresaid Sovereign Lord the King, to the aforesaid William Wigston, Thomas Wigston, and William Fisher. And whereas the same William Wigston, by the special licence, agreement, and consent, of the aforesaid dean and canons, hath newly erected, made, and edified, in the honour of Almighty God, our Blessed Lady, Saint Ursula, and Saint Catharine, a new chapel, inclosed with costly works wrought and made of laten, fixed and laid betwixt two pillars in the body of the church of the aforesaid College, on the North side; to the use and intent that the aforesaid chantry priests and their successors shall there daily, perpetually, minister divine service, as chantry priests of the chantry of the said William Wigston the younger, according to such ordinances and statutes as the same William Wigston, or the aforesaid Thomas, Roger, and William, or the executors of them, or the over-liver of them, shall make, by the consent of the said dean and chapter by his or their writing to be sealed with his or their seal: It is now covenanted, granted, and agreed between the said parties, and every of them, in manner following, that is to say: First, the said dean and canons, and their successors, shall suffer the said chantry priests and their successors for ever thereafter to minister divine service in the same newly-erected laten chapel, without disturbance of the said dean or canons, or of any other, according to the aforesaid ordinances. For which and other purposes William Wigston granted to the dean and canons, and their successors, the manor of Chester, in the county of Northampton, and all his lands and tenements in Chester aforesaid, Archester, Little Chester, Chester by the Water, and Irtlyngburgh, and also two messuages and two yard-lands in Swannington, in the county of Leicester, to the yearly value of 20*l*. above all charges: And the deans and canons engage to grant to the said chantry priests an annuity of 14*l*. per annum; i. e. to either of them 7*l*. per annum, payable, quarterly, at Candlemas, May-day, Lammas, and All Saints. Also they engage, yearly, on the 26th of January, to keep a solemn obit, with Dirige and mass on the morrow, with song, and bells to be rung, for the good estate of the said William Wigston junior during his life, and for his soul after his death, in like manner as they do in other solemn obits; at which they who are present are to have as followeth; viz. the dean, 2*s*.; every canon, 12*d*.; every vicar, 6*d*.; every chief clerk, 6*d*.; each of the said chantry priests, 6*d*.; and other chantry priests of the said College, 4*d*.; each chorister, 3*d*.; and the verge-bearer, 3*d*.: And if any of the said canons or other ministers be out of town of Leicester, he is to have as if present; but if in town, and yet absent, to have nothing. The dean and canons also engage, at the time of Dirige and mass of the said obit, to find four wax tapers, such as they find at other obits, to burn at the hearse of the said William; and also to pay on the day of the said obit, yearly, as follows: viz. to the mayor of Leicester, and his brethren and ministers of the said town, resorting to the said obit, and offering there at the mass, and saying at the door of the said new laten chapel, before they depart out of the said College, the Psalm De profundis, for the soul of the said William Wigston, 3*s*.; to be applied as followeth; viz. to the mayor, 8*d*.; and to every six of his most antient brethren, 4*d*.; to the mayor's serjeant, 2*d*.; and to the mayor's clerk, 2*d*.; and the bellman, to make relation and notice throughout the town the day and time of the said obit, as he doth at other special obits, 2*d*.: And also the dean and canons, yearly, to distribute among the poor people, on the day of the said obit, 2*s*. in money; and, yearly, to cause 24 penny tapers of wax to be made, and set upon the candlesticks of the said new laten chapel; and that the same be made and renewed twice in the year; i. e. at the feast of Easter and All Saints; and they shall be lighted by the clerk of the College or deputy at the eight principal feasts solemnized in the said College, and all the feasts of our Lady, and in the feast of St. Catharine[4] and St. Ursula, in time of high mass and Magnificat: And the dean, yearly, to pay the clerk, for lighting and doing out the tapers, 16*d*.; i. e. each quarter 4*d*.; and the dean and canons to pay, yearly, for scowering the said laten chapel, 4*d*.; and to find for the two chantry priests bread, wine, wax candle for their mass; and to keep and repair the ornaments which William Wigston gave to the chapel, &c. (as mentioned particularly in p. 335.) For which agreements and grants, William Wigston paid to the said dean and canons, the day of the date of these presents, 100 marks sterling: And further it was agreed, that the dean and canons pay to the provost of the said College 6*s*. 3*d*. per annum, for his pains in the premisses; for which William Wigston paid the said dean and canons ten marks over and above the other gifts."

[1] Roger Wigston, "descended from a family of the Wigstons in Leicester, divers whereof were merchants of the Staple," was a lawyer, and steward to the priory of Pinley in Warwickshire; where, at the time of the dissolution, Margaret Wigston was prioress. He was lord of the manor of Wolston in Warwickshire; high sheriff 33 Hen. VIII.; for several years in the commission of the peace; and, by his will, dated 34 Hen. VIII. he left his body to be buried in Wolston church. Dugdale's Warwickshire, vol. I. p. 37; vol. II. p. 822. His son William afterwards obtained a grant of the site of the priory of Pinley. But the bounty of William Wygston did not stop here. He very soon enlarged his original plan; and, on the 10th of June 1513, associating with him his two brothers, obtained letters patent from King Henry VIII. for the founding and endowing a perpetual Hospital within the town of Leicester; and, in consequence, compiled a suitable code of laws and regulations[1]; and provided for its endowment with divers manors and lands; directing, that, at the expiration of the term which he had granted to the chantry in the collegiate church of the Newark, there should be in the Hospital, besides the 12 poor men and 12 women (if the revenue would thereunto extend) a Master and three Confraters: but at first there was a Master and one Confrater only, and so it still continues.

It appears, however, that Mr. Wigston did not live to carry his benevolence into effect; for it is stated in the Act of Parliament of 18 Elizabeth, that " he did not accomplish the same during his life[2];" but that the then surviving trustees (whom he had made his executors) obtained, on the 13th of July in the same year, the king's letters patent for the same purpose[3]; and on the 10th of November following had a further confirmation of the same grant, with permission to purchase, for the use of the said Hospital, manors, lands, and tenements, of the yearly value of 23*l. ultra reprisas*[4].

Feb. 1, 1516-17, " Rex assignavit Rogerum Wygston receptorem suum generalem omnium maneriorum, &c. que fuerunt alicujus heredis infra etatem in custodiâ suâ existentium, ac percipiendi xx*l.* per annum & xx*s.* pro portagio cujuslibet centum librarum, ad vitam[5]."

The Hospital having been erected within the parish of St. Martin; an indenture was made, between Richard Pekesall, abbot, with his convent, and sir Nicholas Wagstaffe, vicar of St. Martin's, and sir William Fyshar, master, and sir John Thorpe, confrater of the Hospital, and the 24 poor people; whereby it was agreed, that the vicar shall administer the sacraments to the said poor, and visit them, as they do their other parishioners, when there is need, and bury their bodies in the church-yard when dead: That the said poor shall be exempted from paying tythes, either predial or personal: That the abbot and vicar shall permit the master and confrater to celebrate divine service in the chapel, and not compel them to be present at divine service in St. Martin's church or church-yard, or to administer the sacraments to the parishioners, or to swear obedience to them: That at the death of any of the poor no mortuary shall be demanded; but the master and confrater shall pay mortuaries. It was also agreed, that, instead of tithes, oblations, and other parochial rites due from the said poor, the master shall, every Easter eve, before noon, pay 6*s.* 8*d.* on the high altar of St. Martin's church, to be divided equally between the abbot and the vicar; and, in case of failure or neglect, shall forfeit 13*s.* 4*d.* to be divided between the abbot and vicar. And the parties above-named consented that they should be compelled to the observation of the premisses by the bishop of Lincoln, or his commissary. Dated July 10, 1520, 12 Hen. VIII. Which composition was ratified by William bishop of Lincoln July 12, 1520; who also granted licence to have and administer the Eucharist in the chapel of the Hospital, provided it were without detriment to the parish church.

June 1, 1520, the master, confrater, and poor of this Hospital, obtained a lease for 100 years, renewable for ever, of a large garden abutting in St. Francis lane, the property of the Grey Friers[6].

Feb. 12, 1521-2, new letters patent were obtained from the king, in the following ample terms:

" Henricus Octavus, Dei gratiâ, Anglie & Francie Rex, fidei defensor, & dominus Hibernie; omnibus ad quos presentes litere pervenerint, salutem. In cujus rei testimonium, has literas nostras fieri fecimus patentes. Teste meipso, apud Westmonasterium, duodecimo die Februarii, anno regni nostri tertio decimo."

The statutes which were compiled by the Founder are in Latin, and very long; nor have I a complete copy of them; but, by what remains, it appears that it was the intention of Mr. Wigston that both the master and confrater should be seculares, non religiosi. He directs also, that, after the decease of himself, and his two brothers Thomas and Roger, upon any vacancy of the master or confrater, the dean and chapter of the collegiate church of The Newark should have power to choose and put into the vacant place a fit person for one fortnight; which if they neglected to do in that fortnight's space, then the mayor of Leicester for the time being, with the four justices of peace of the said town, or at least with the two senior justices, should have the power, for the next following fortnight, to name, admit, and put, a fit person into the place vacant; and in case of their neglect, the like power was granted to the abbot for the next fourteen days; and in case of his neglect, it reverted to the dean and chapter of the Newark again for another fortnight, and then to the mayor and justices, and to the abbot, successively, till the place should be filled. It was also ordered, that the master and confrater should constantly reside within the precincts of the Hospital; and not be absent above 40 days in a year, unless upon the affairs of the Hospital, without leave of one of the canons of the Newark; with this proviso, that the master and confrater should never both be absent at the same time one whole day and night. The founder allowed the master to have one benefice out of the town of Leicester, provided that he constantly resided in the Hospital; but confined the confrater to his preferment in the Hospital, so that if he had any other benefice, with cure or without cure, or any farm or promotion whatsoever, he should be deprived and expelled immediately. He also ordained, that all fines and profits arising from letting the lands and tenements should be applied to the use of the Hospital; and that, if either the master or confrater should retain any of the said profits to their own use, he should be expelled, &c. These, with other statutes relating to the master, confrater, 12 men and 12 women, were confirmed by John bishop of Lincoln; and by Richard Mawdely, archdeacon of Leicester.

Mr. Rogers, who was confrater here in 1697, and archdeacon of Leicester in 1704, having contended against Mr. Carte, then vicar of St. Martin's, that Wigston's Hospital was no part of that parish, and having forbid such persons as lived within the precincts of the Hospital, although no members of the Hospital, to pay any parochial due, either to the vicar or officers of the parish; "I think it proper to observe," says Mr. Carte, "that William Wigston, in his foundation charter, says he had built it 'supra quandam terram meam infra villam Leycestrie, juxta cemiterium ecclesie parochialis Sancti Martini ex parte occidentali, & infra limites ejusdem parochie.' And John bishop of Lincoln, in his confirmation of the statutes of William Wigston, dated at Buckden, ultimo Sept. 1522, describes it to be 'Hospitale constructum infra parochiam Sancti Martini de Leicestriâ.' So likewise Richard Mawdely, S. T. B. archdeacon of Leicester, in his confirmation of the Statutes, dated at Leicester April 13, 1525, calls it, 'Hospitale pauperum infra parochiam Sancti Martini, Leicestrie.' And in the composition made between the abbot of Leicester and the vicar of St. Martin, and the master of the Hospital, it is said to be founded 'infra parochiam ecclesie parochialis Sancti Martini, Leicestrie;' and the said vicar is bound, by himself or deputy, to visit and minister the Sacrament and sacramentals to all the poor men and women in the Hospital, 'prout aliis suis ibidem parochianis & filiis spiritualiis facient;' dated July 10, 1520."

By a copy of an instrument, or Inspeximus, remaining in the Court of Exchequer, bearing "Teste Thomà duce Norfolc', thesaurario Anglie, apud Westmonasterium, 29 Octobris, 23 Hen. VIII." it appears that William Hopton, esq. son and heir of John Hopton, esq. formerly held of the king, in capite, the third part of the manor of Castel Carleton, with the third part of the advowson of the church there, by service of the third part of a knight's fee, &c. &c. The chaplains and poor men of Wigston's Hospital in Leicester 19 Hen. VIII. appearing in the Exchequer, shewed that Arthur Hopton, esq. was seised of that third part, and also two other parts of the manor of Castel Carleton, in the county of Lincoln, in demesne, as of fee; and that William Wigston (in virtue of the king's letters patent for founding an Hospital, &c.) having the said manor, with the appurtenances, settled for his use, by a recovery, did, by writing, 1 March, 11 Henry VIII. settle on them the said manor, with the appurtenances, in Castel Carleton, Great Carleton, and Little Carleton, co. Lincoln; and also the manor of Swannington, and 12 messuages, 10 tofts, 20 yard-lands, 100 acres of meadow, 200 acres of pasture, 100 acres of wood, and 16*s*. rent, in Swannington, Sybson, Raunston, Ibstock, Hathern, and Arbery; and one messuage, four crofts, 124 acres of land, 20 acres of meadow, 20 acres of pasture, in Cawdewell and Wykeham, co. Leic.; and three messuages, four closes, containing 30 acres of pasture, in Leicester and in its suburbs; one garden, formerly three gardens, juxta Cow-lane, and 2*s*. rent of the house of Thomas Grene, in Southgate; also one messuage, 40 acres of land, 10 of meadow, 12 acres of pasture, and 10*s*. rent, in Ondeby; and three messuages, two yard-lands and a half, 12 acres of meadow, and 20 of pasture, in Kymcote and Walton, co. Leic.; all which amounted to the yearly value of 49*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. And they said, that the manor of Castle Carleton, with its appurtenances, viz. 26 messuages, 6 tofts, 40 acres of land, 100 acres of meadow, 40 acres of pasture, 30 acres of wood, 100 acres of marsh, and 40*s*. 9*d*. ob. rent, in Castel Carleton, Great Carleton, Little Carleton, in the county of Lincoln, beyond reprisals, are worth 22*l*. per annum, and no more; and the manor of Swannington, with its appurtenances there, and in Sybston, Raunston, Ibstock, Hathern, and Arbery, and the messuages, lands and tenements, in Cawdewell and Wyken, and town and suburb of Leicester, and Ondeby and Kymcote, and Walton, in the county of Leicester, beyond reprisals, are worth but 18*l*. per annum[1].

In 1539, a survey of this Hospital was made by the king's commissioners; the result of which will appear in the following account, remaining in the Augmentation office:

In 1545, William Wigston[2], of Wolston in the county of Warwick, obtained from king Henry VIII. a grant of the site of the priory of Pinley, in that county[3].

In an account of Wigston's Hospital, taken in 1547, it is stated to be worth,

"In firmâ, &c. LXXXXVI*l.* XVIII*s.* IX*d.* ob. q^{a}.
Repris' inde LXXXXIIII*l.* VIII*s.* II*d.* ob.
Remanet clarè per annum LV*s.* VII*d.* q^{a}."

On the 13 of February 1551-2, king Edward VI. reciting the two grants of his royal Father, of Jan. 10, 1513, and Feb. 12, 1521-2, thus confirms them.

"Edwardus Sextus, Dei gratiâ, Anglie, Francie, & Hibernie Rex, fidei defensor, & in terra ecclesie Anglicane, &c. & Hibernie supremum caput. Omnibus ad quos presentes litere pervenerint, salutem. Inspeximus literas patentes domini Henrici nuper Regis Anglie Octavi, patris nostri percarissimi, factas in hec verba, 'Henricus Octavus,' &c. [as in p. 472.] Nos autem literas predictas, ac omnia & singula in eisdem contenta rata habentes & grata, ea pro nobis & heredibus nostris, quantum in nobis est, acceptamus & approbamus, ac nobis unus capellanis & pauperibus Hospitalis predicti, et successoribus suis, ratificamus & confirmavimus, prout litere predicte in se consionabiliter testantur. In cujus rei testimonium, has literas nostras fieri fecimus patentes· Teste meipso, apud Westmonasterium, decimo octavo die Februarii, anno regni nostri sexto. F. BEAUMONT."

John Herault, sometime master of this Hospital (in a letter which Mr. Carte saw), says that Queen Mary also granted letters of confirmation of the Founder's gift; but no such confirmation has occurred in our researches.

At the request of Henry earl of Huntingdon, a generous benefactor to the town of Leicester[4], Queen Elizabeth gave authority to the said earl and others to make statutes and ordinances for the government of the Hospital; which were accordingly thus framed:

"Whereas our Sovereign Lady Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. by her letters patent, bearing date the 7th day of May, in the 14th year of her reign, hath, amongst other things, given authority unto us, Henry earl of Huntingdon; Ralph Sadler, knight, chancellor of her Majesty's Duchy of Lancaster; and George Bromley, esq. attorney general of the said Duchy, and to the survivors of us, to make ordinances, rules, and statutes, for the good government of the Hospital of William Wigston in Leicester, in the county of Leicester; and hath, in the said letters patent, commanded that the now two chaplains and poor folk of that Hospital, and their successors, shall for ever hereafter behave themselves, be conversant together, and be chosen, according to the rules and statutes by us, or the survivors of us, to be made, and put in writing under our seals, or the seals of the survivors of us, as by the same letters patent more at large appeareth: We the aforesaid Henry, Ralph, and George, to accomplish her Highness's pleasure and commandment in this behalf; having also considered the statutes heretofore made concerning the said Hospital by William Wigston the younger, late of Leicester aforesaid, merchant of the Staple, deceased, founder of the said Hospital, and finding some defects in the same, do make, constitute, and ordain, these statutes, rules, and ordinances following, to be accepted, reputed, taken, and obeyed, as the only and sufficient statutes, rules, and ordinances, made, decreed, and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, for the government of the said Hospital, and the possessions thereof, and of the said chaplains and poor folk, and their successors for ever; and the same statutes, rules, and ordinances, we ordain, make and establish, in manner and form following; that is to say: First, that the Hospital now called 'William Wigston's Hospital in Leicester' aforesaid, be for ever hereafter called by the name of William Wigston's Hospital in the town of Leicester, of the Foundation of the same William; and do not, at any time hereafter, bear the name of any fancied Saint, or other superstitious name: Also, when the said Hospital is incorporate by the name of 'The chaplains and poor folk of the Hospital of William Wigston, in the Town of Leicester, of the Foundation of the same William,' as by the said letters patent of our Sovereign Lady the Queen's Majesty that now is doth appear, we ordain, establish, and declare, that, in respect of order and distinction of degree, the one of the said chaplains shall, in common speech, and for the better understanding of the true meaning of these ordinances, but not by way of any alteration of the name whereby they are, together with the poor folk of the same Hospital, incorporate by the said letters patent, be called the Master, and the other chaplain the Brother, of the same Hospital; and that, in all the places of these ordinances where the Master of the said Hospital, or the Master, is spoken of, the same is meant and intended of the office or promotion within the said Hospital which Thomas Sampson now occupieth or enjoyeth; and that in all places of the said ordinances when the Brother of the said Hospital is spoken of, the same is meant and intended of the office or promotion within the said Hospital which one Geffrey Jonson now occupieth or enjoyeth.

[2] This William was son of Roger (p. 471); and nephew of our Founder. He was in the commission of the peace and escheator towards the latter end of the reign of King Henry VIII.; sheriff 5 Edw. VI.; knighted 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar.; died Sept 27, 1577, and was buried in the chancel of Wolston church. His son Roger, who was then 40 years old, dying afterwards without issue male, the manor of Wolston descended to his two daughters; by one of whom, Susanna, it was brought in marriage to Nicholas Wentworth, esq. Dugdale's Warwickshire, vol. II. p. 802.

Item, that the said Thomas Sampson, now master of the said Hospital, shall enjoy and possess that office or promotion during his natural life, according to the purport and true meaning of these ordinances; and that, after his decease, or other avoidance of the same office or promotion, the same office or promotion may and shall be conferred, given, and granted, by the Queen's Majesty, her heirs and successors, by letters patent under her and their Highnes' seal of the Duchy of Lancaster, for term of life of such person to whom the same shall be so conferred, granted, or given, only by advice of the chancellor and counsel of the said Duchy, and without any warrant by bill assigned; and that the person to whom such letters patent shall be so made shall, by force of the same letters patent, immediately after he hath made such corporal oath for the good government of the said Hospital as hereafter in these ordinances is appointed, be in actual and real possession of the said office or promotion of master, without any putting in possession, or other ceremony or circumstance in that behalf, to be used: And we ordain and appoint, that no person shall be capable of the said office or promotion last above mentioned, unless he be a man learned, and admitted into one of the Ecclesiastical orders now established within the Church of England.

Item, that at what time soever hereafter the said office or promotion of the master shall be void, either by death, resignation, deprivation, or otherwise, that then such person as then shall occupy or enjoy the office or promotion of the brother of the said Hospital shall, within 14 days next after such avoidance, signify the same unto the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for the time being, to the end the same may be conferred, given, or granted, as is aforesaid, with all convenient speed.

Item, that the master of the said Hospital, at such time as he receiveth the patent of his said office, shall, in the Court of the Duchy of Lancaster, if it be in the Term-time, or otherwise before the Chancellor of the Duchy for the time being, or, in his absence, before the Attorney of the same Court, receive a solemn oath, to become a good and profitable master of the said Hospital, and to procure the profit and commodity of the same, and of the incorporation thereof, by all lawful means, to the uttermost of his power; and to govern and order the said Hospital, and all the members thereof, and all the possessions, goods, revenues, and other things belonging to the same, according to the purport and true meaning of these ordinances.

Item, that the master of the said Hospital for the time being shall have committed to his faithfulness and discretion full and whole authority to receive, disburse, administer, and keep, according to these ordinances, all the rents, revenues, goods, and chattels, moveable and immoveable, and other profits whatsoever, which do now belong, or shall hereafter belong, to the said Hospital, or the incorporation thereof, or to be received or levied upon, or by reason of, the possessions belonging, or which hereafter shall belong, to the said Hospital, or upon or by reason of any part or parcel thereof; and that he shall have full, sole, and perfect authority to conclude for the making of leases, and for all other improvements, profits, and commodities, to be lawfully raised, had, or obtained, of, in, or upon, the lands, tenements, hereditaments, and possessions, belonging, or which hereafter shall belong, to the said Hospital, or of, in, or upon, any part or parcel thereof.

Item, that the said chaplains and poor folks, or their successors, or any of them, by what name or names soever they be called or incorporate, shall not, at any time hereafter, alien, convey, assure, or devise, or cause to be aliened, conveyed, assured, or devised, any manors, lands, tenements, rents, tithes, or hereditaments, which now are, or hereafter shall be, parcel of the possessions of the said Hospital, unless it be by leasing or granting the same, or any parcel thereof, only for one and twenty years or under, and not above, or for one, two, or three lives, and not above, and upon which leases and grants such and as much rent or rents or more as hath been most commonly paid for the thing or things so leased or granted, within the space of twenty years next before such lease or grant shall be reserved to the leasers or granters thereof, and their successors, and yearly payable to the use and behoof of the incorporation of the said Hospital, according to such reservation, and according to the purport and true meaning of these ordinances, during the continuance of the same leases or grants, the same estate, conveyances, and assurances, so to be made for years or lives, to be made only of such effect, and in such manner and form, as bishops being seised of any lands or tenements of any estate or inheritance in the right of their churches or bishopricks were, by the statute made in the thirty-second year of the reign of the late king of famous memory, King Henry VIII. limited and authorized to make leases, and not otherwise; and that all alienations, conveyances, and assurances, leases, estates, or in-trusts, hereafter to be made, conveyed, or assured, of any the manors, lands, tenements, rents, tithes, or hereditaments, which now are, or hereafter shall be, parcel of the possessions of the said Hospital, other than such leases and grants as are before in this article appointed, to be made as is aforesaid, shall be utterly void and of non-effect.

Item, that the master of the said Hospital for the time being shall convert and employ all manner of improvements of rents, profits of wood-sales, and all other sums of money arising, or hereafter to be levied, of, in, or upon, any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, now belonging, or which hereafter shall belong, to the said Hospital, other than such fines as shall be reasonably taken for leases hereafter to be made, to the only use, profit and commodity, of the said Hospital, and the incorporation thereof, according to the purport and true meaning of these ordinances, if the same be not disposed to other uses, or appointed to other purposes by these ordinances; which said fines for leases it shall be lawful for the master of the Hospital for the time being to take and convert to his own proper use, and to the increase of his living there.

Item, the master of the said Hospital, hereafter at any time to be made, shall, at his first entry into that office, receive, by inventory, at the delivery of the brother of the said Hospital, and in the presence of two of the elder poor men of the same Hospital, all the plate, household stuff, and other furniture, to the same Hospital and to the master's house there belonging; the which plate, household stuff, and furniture, the same master shall use and occupy only within that house which is appointed to him within the same Hospital. He shall also, from time to time, repair and amend the same furniture when it is in decay, and buy such new as he, from time to time, shall think necessary, at the cost and charge of the said Hospital. All which said plate, stuff, and furniture, he shall keep faithfully in an inventory tripartite; one part whereof, signed with the hand of the brother of the same Hospital, shall remain with the master himself; and another part whereof, signed with the master's own hand, shall remain with the said brother; and the third part, signed also with the hands of the said master and brother, shall remain in the Court of the Duchy of Lancaster, amongst the records of the same Court. And that at all times, and from time to time, whensoever the said office or promotion of the master of the said Hospital shall be vacant either by death, deprivation, resignation, or otherwise, then it shall be lawful for the master of the said Hospital which shall be made and appointed next after such avoidance to demand the same plate, household stuff, and other furniture, of the last master of the said Hospital, if he be then living; and if he be dead, then of his executors or administrators, executor or administrator, or of any other person or persons in whose custody or possession any of the same plate, household stuff, or furniture, shall be; and to sue for the same if it be denied, or not delivered according to such demand, by bill, in the said Court of the Duchy; upon which the Chancellor and Counsel of the same Court shall have authority to hear and determine the same matter, according to that they shall think consonant to right and equity.

Item, that it shall not be lawful either for the master or for the brother of the said Hospital to grant to any person or persons any of his or their said offices or promotions within the said Hospital, nor to resign or give up the same, elsewhere or otherwise than into the hands of the Queen's Majesty her heirs or successors before the Chancellor and Counsel of the said Duchy, in such manner and form as leases or letters patent under the seal of the said Duchy are used to be surrendered or given up.

Item, that for the better order of the remembrance or reckoning of the yearly charges, receipts, and expences of the said Hospital, the master there do, every year, from time to time, make a perfect book of the said receipts and expences, the contents of which book and books so to be made shall always begin at the 1st day of November, and end at the last day of October following; which book so made up he shall, before the last day of December next following that day at which the same book should end as is aforesaid, present and shew to some such person or persons as the Chancellor of the Duchy for the time being shall appoint to be auditor or auditors for that purpose; and thereupon the same auditor or auditors shall take the account of the said master for the charges and expences aforesaid; which account being finished, as well the said auditors, as also the then master and the then brother of the said Hospital, shall sign that book with subscription of their hands; whereupon the said master shall lay up that book, thus signed, in a chest standing in the chamber of the said Hospital, now used or appointed for the keeping of the evidences of the said Hospital, there to be kept, with the rest of the books of accounts, locked under two divers locks of sundry wards, with keys for the same, the one of which keys shall remain in the keeping of the master, the other in the keeping of the brother; and that the master shall or may give the auditor or auditors, at every audit, 6*s.* 8*d.*; of which reward to the auditor or auditors, and also for parchment, paper, ink, and writing of the accounts, and for a dinner or supper to be made to the auditor or auditors, if the master shall think good, the charge of the same dinner or supper not exceeding the sum of 10*s.*, the master shall have due allowance of, upon his said account, to be retained in his own hands, of the rents and revenues of the said Hospital.

Item, that all the money which shall be found to remain in the hands of the master at every such account shall be by the said master laid up in some strong chest, thenceforth to be prepared and set in the lodging of the master within the said Hospital; and that every sum and sums so by him put in, and the days when it is laid in, shall be noted in a book with his own hands, which book shall always be kept in the chest last mentioned; out of which chest it shall be lawful for the master, from time to time, to take out such sums of money as he shall think good, to be employed about the affairs of the Hospital. He shall also note, with his own hand, the sum so taken out, and the day of taking it out, in a bill indented tripartite; one part whereof shall remain in the keeping of the master, the other part in the keeping of the brother, the third part to be always kept in the said chest last mentioned; to the end that at the next audit he may give a just account of the money so taken out, together with other receipts of that year for which he doth account; and the said chest last mentioned shall have two several locks, the wards whereof shall be diverse the one from the other, with two keys for the same; and the one of the same keys shall be in the keeping of the master, and the other in the keeping of the brother. And we do also ordain, that the common seal of the said Hospital shall be always safely kept in the chest last mentioned; which seal shall for ever hereafter be engraven with the arms of the said William Wigston the Founder only; having these words engraven about the said arms in one circle, Sigillum Hospitalis Gulielmi Wigston; and in another circle thereof these words, Date Elimosinam, et ecce omnia munda sunt vobis.

Item, that all and every master hereafter to be made, at his first entry into that office, shall and may require of his next predecessor, if he be living, or of his executors or administrators, executor or administrator, if he be dead, the accounts of all receipts and expences had and made by his last predecessor at any time since the same predecessor made his last account of the receipts and expences concerning the said Hospital as is aforesaid; and if the same predecessor (if he be living, or his executors or administrators, executor or administrator, if he be dead) refuse to make such account, or, having made such account, do not within forty days after such account pay, or cause to be paid, to the said master to whom such account was made, or to his successors, such sum or sums of money as shall, upon the same account, be found to be due and payable by the same accountant or accountants, that then it shall be lawful as well for the master of the said Hospital for the time being to sue for remedy in that behalf in the said Court of the Duchy, as also for the Chancellor and Counsel of the same Court for the time being, upon such suit, to hear and determine the same matter and controversy, according as shall seem to them to stand with right and equity.

Item, that whensoever hereafter it shall come to pass, either by such frugal ordering of the revenues of the said Hospital as the master shall use or by the gifts or bequests of any other person or persons, that the treasure or money, being the goods of the said Hospital, and to be kept in the said chest as is aforesaid, do amount to the sum of 100*l.* of lawful English money and upwards, then it shall be lawful for the master to employ and bestow that sum of money which shall from time to time be more than the 100*l.* according to his discretion, in relieving of some poor of the town of Leicester, or upon the amendment of highways about Leicester, or in doing of any act or acts profitable either to the said Hospital, or to the incorporation thereof, or to the poor there, or to the said town of Leicester, or the inhabitants thereof; so that the said master do, at every audit, bring, in writing, the true manner of bestowing of the said sum or sums, signed with the hands of them which received the same money at his hands to any such purpose.

Item, that the master shall, once in every seven years, survey all the lands, tenements, hereditaments, and other possessions, to the said Hospital belonging; he shall procure perfect Rentals and Terriers to be made of them, and shall keep the same safely with the other Evidences of the same Hospital. He shall not only do and maintain all manner of reparations in any wise concerning the said Hospital; but also shall travel about the affairs and businesses of the same Hospital, as the necessity of them shall require, or send the brother or some other man about the same; and his and their necessary expences at which he and they are or shall be in these and like charges and businesses, shall be borne of the revenues of the said Hospital, and be allowed upon the accompt to be made as is aforesaid.

Item, that the master shall receive yearly, of the revenues of the said Hospital, the sum of 10*l.* of lawful money of England, for his yearly stipend, to be paid, and retained in his own hands, of the rents and revenues of the said Hospital, at four times in the year; that is to say, at the feast of the Nativity of our Lord God, the Annunciation of St. Mary the Virgin, the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, and the feast of St. Michael the Archangel, by even portions; and shall and may also receive and have, yearly, 7*s.* of yearly rent, out of the lands and tenements appointed for the maintenance of the Grammar-school there, together with such meadowing and leye as the master there hath heretofore used to have; and that he shall have at his pleasure, use, and occupy, so long as he enjoyeth that office, for his dwelling-house, the four rooms, built of stone, adjoining to the lodging of the poor there, together with the house, hall, kitchen, buttery, cellar, lofts, and the little court and back yard thereunto belonging, now used for the lodgings and house of the master, with all other the gardens and houses there, now in the occupying of the master, which do lie between the church called St. Martin's and the High-street; the garden also called Francis garden, the yard thereunto belonging, with the stable and housing standing there, with all easements thereto now belonging. He shall also have authority to make provision for himself and his family upon the rents, issues, and revenues, of the possessions belonging to the said Hospital, as well of sufficient fuel of wood and coals, of oatmeal, salt and candles, as also of sufficient provision for the finding of two geldings, and no more, of the rents and revenues of the said Hospital. He shall also have authority, at his discretion, either to entertain in the said Hospital, or to present in the town of Leicester, such strangers, and especially such of the kindred and name of the Founder, as he shall think needful, so that the charge of such entertainment and presents do not exceed the yearly value of 40*s.*; and thereof he shall also have allowance upon his said accompt.

Item, that the master shall not take any other thing or things belonging to the said Hospital, more than is appointed by these ordinances, to his own proper use, or to the use or behoof of any other person or persons. He shall not spoil, waste, nor consume the goods, nor outrageously spoil the woods or underwoods belonging to the said Hospital; but faithfully keep and order them, according to these ordinances, and to the best commodity of the said Hospital, and of the incorporation thereof, and the members of the same. And if the master shall at any time be found to do the contrary, then, upon complaint made in that behalf in the said Court of the Duchy, it shall be lawful for the Chancellor and Counsel of that Court for the time being, not only to compel such master, for misbehaving himself in wasting, spoiling or consuming (if he be then living, or his executors or administrators, executor or administrator, if he be dead), to make full satisfaction of all that is by him turned to his proper use, or to any other use, or wasted, spoiled, or consumed, contrary to the true meaning of these ordinances; but also to take order according to these ordinances, for or concerning the reformation of the said misbehaviours or offences, and for or concerning the expulsion or other correction of the said master so misbehaving himself, or for or concerning any the same matters or causes: And for these or the like purposes, we do ordain, that the Chancellor and Counsel of the said Duchy for the time being shall have authority, from time to time, to visit the said Hospital, or to grant out letters patent of commission, under the seal of the said Duchy, to such persons as the said Chancellor and Counsel shall nominate or appoint for the visiting of the said Hospital, as often as need shall require; which visitors so to be appointed shall have authority to examine the faults, transgressions, and misbehaviours, of the said master and brother, or either of them, or of the poor folk of the said Hospital, or any of them, and thereof to make certificate to the said Chancellor and Counsel for the time being, to the end that reformation may be therein had as occasion requireth; and the said Chancellor and Counsel shall, upon such certificate, or upon any other good and lawful information, have authority, by some of these ordinances, not only to reform and correct such faults, transgressions, and misbehaviours, whereof they shall be so certified or informed, either by checking and disallowing of the offender or offenders in some part of his, her, or their ordinary wages or allowance, which should be due within one year after such certificate or information shall be had, or otherwise by any reasonable means as to their discretions shall seem most convenient; but also, from time to time, to take order that the said Hospital, and the incorporation thereof, and all the members of the same, and all and singular the possessions, revenues, and goods, belonging to the said Hospital, be governed and used according to these ordinances, and to the best commodity of the said Hospital, and of the incorporation thereof, and further, to expound and declare the true meaning of these ordinances, and every or any of them, where they are in any point doubtful, likewise to deprive the master and brother of the same Hospital, or either of them, upon good and just cause duly proved against them, or either of them, either for wilful and unmeasurable wasting, spoiling, or consuming, of any the lands, tenements, possessions, or goods, belonging to the said Hospital, by reason of unprofitable and outrageous leases of wood-sales, or otherwise; or for placing any poor within the said Hospital for any bribe or reward; or else for corrupt religion, heresy, perjury, adultery, fornication, unseemly frequenting and haunting of taverns and alehouses, or for any other notorious crime, indecent behaviour, exercise, or condition, whereby notorious slander or reproof towards the said Hospital, or the government thereof, shall or may justly arise, and whereof the same master or brother so to be deprived hath before that time had mention from the Chancellor of the Duchy for the time being, or by any visitors appointed to visit the said Hospital as is aforesaid, and hath not, upon such motion, reformed himself in that behalf.

Item, that he and they which shall, from time to time, hereafter be chosen to that office or promotion of one of the chaplains within the said Hospital which is by these ordinances called the Brother, and which office or promotion the said Jeffrey Jonson now hath or occupieth, shall be a man learned, of sound judgement in the Christian religion; such one also as is admitted into the orders of a priest or deacon, and allowed to be a preacher of the word of God: and that at all times from henceforth, and from time to time, the office or promotion of the brother shall be conferred by letters patent under the seal of the said Duchy, in such form and manner as before is appointed for the making of the master.

Item, that the brother shall receive a corporal oath, after his letters patent obtained, and before his first entering into his said promotion or office; which oath shall be administered to him by the master, before the poor people in the said Hospital, and shall be of this effect; to wit, that he shall be a diligent minister of the Hospital, a true and obedient brother to the master, in furthering all his lawful doings concerning the government of the said Hospital, and doing those things which do appertain to the office of the brother, as they be appointed by these ordinances.

Item, that the brother shall, from time to time, diligently instruct the poor folk of the said Hospital, and use all diligence in teaching them to recite in English, and also to know and understand, the Ten Commandments of Almighty God, the Lord's Prayer, the Articles of the Christian Faith as they be expressed in the Common Creed which is called the symbol of the Apostles; to have such understanding as is necessary for good Christians touching the nature and use of the Sacraments of Christ, and to live holily as good Christians ought to do. He shall diligently visit, instruct, and comfort them when they are sick; and shall rebuke and reprove all manner of evil which he shall see amongst them, seeking by all means to reform it; and if any of the said poor folk be so wilful that they do refuse to be instructed, reproved and reformed by him as is aforesaid, he shall declare the same to the master, who shall punish that evil person according to the ordinances hereafter specified. The brother also shall, either by himself, or by some such order as he shall take with the consent of the master, see that all the poor people of the Hospital do, every Dominical day and week-day, go to the church called St. Martin's, to morning and evening prayer; to hear also the sermons there made, and to receive the holy communion, administered there according to an ordinance hereafter in this book specified: Nevertheless, the brother, upon urgent cause, with the consent of the master, shall or may say, or cause to be said, the morning and evening prayer on the days aforesaid in the chapel belonging unto and being within the said Hospital. The brother also shall say, every day, at seven of the clock in the evening, the prayers now used in the said Hospital, in which are recited the Ten Commandments of Almighty God, the Articles of the Christian Faith, the Lord's Prayer, with a Prayer for the Queen's Majesty and the Realm; which prayers shall be pronounced so distinctly, that all the whole number of the poor folk may pronounce and pray the same with the minister.

Item, that the brother shall receive yearly, of the revenues of the Hospital, by the hands of the master, the sum of 20 marks for his wages; that is, of the old pension accustomed to be paid to the brother, 8*l.*, and of the pension used to be paid to a singing priest, 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; and also, out of the lands and tenements appointed for the maintenance of the Grammar school there, 5*s.* yearly, as heretofore hath been used, and out of such manors, lands, tenements, and rents, as it shall please the said earl of Huntingdon to assure and convey to the said chaplains and poor folk, and their successors, such yearly rent and stipend as it shall please the said earl, by his writing signed with his hand, and sealed with his seal, to limit and appoint for that purpose. And that of all the said sums of money so to be yearly paid by the said master to the said brother, the master shall have allowance upon his accompt, to be made as is aforesaid. The brother also shall have for his dwelling-house the same which joineth on the South to the great back gate of the said Hospital, on the West upon the High-street in Leicester aforesaid, with all houses, yards, and gardens thereunto belonging, and that without paying any yearly rent for the same; from the which house the brother shall always have and use a passage to be made through the wall of his back-yard into the yard next unto the house and lodging of the poor people; which said house appointed to the brother shall be repaired, so oft as need shall require, with slate and great timber, at the cost and charges of the Hospital, as the master shall appoint it; of which charge of reparations the master shall have allowance upon his accompt. The brother shall possess and occupy that house for himself only and his family to dwell in; he shall not let nor sell the same, nor any parcel thereof, to any person, but occupy it himself, and that so long as he enjoyeth the office of the brother, and no longer: if he do not dwell in it himself, or if he do not let it, or any part of it, to any person, it shall be lawful for the master to take the whole house into his hands, and to sell and let the same to the use of the Hospital.

Item, the brother shall not be absent any one whole day from the Hospital, and from his office and charge there, unless it be by the leave of the master first obtained; and the brother having such leave of absence shall procure and provide some such minister as the master shall like of, to discharge his office during the time of his absence. Such times also for his absence shall be by the master allowed of, and none other, in which times the master himself shall be present at the Hospital; so that both of them at once shall not at any time be absent from the said Hospital one whole day. The brother shall not take any other ecclesiastical living with cure, while he enjoyeth this office. If he do take any such, at his first taking possession thereof, he shall lose the said office or promotion of the brother, and stand deprived thereof ipso facto, and of all commodities thereto belonging.

Item, that when the office of the brother doth, by death, deprivation, resignation, or otherwise, become void, the master for the time being shall, within 14 days next after any such avoidance, signify the same to the Chancellor of the Duchy for the time being, to the end the same office or promotion of the brother may be granted in convenient time as is aforesaid; and the brother so departing from the said office shall deliver, or cause to be delivered, such keys and writings as are committed to his custody to the keeping of two of the elder or discreetest poor men of the said Hospital, who shall safely keep the same until another do enter into that office of the brother, to whom they shall deliver the said keys and writings, immediately after that he hath taken the oath to him by the master administered as is before ordained.

Item, that if the brother do break any of these ordinances which do concern him and his office, it shall be lawful for the master to punish his transgression, by subtracting for a time some part of his stipend appointed to him; and if the transgressions be such as to deserve greater correction, the master shall declare the same to the Chancellor and Counsel of the said Duchy, who shall have authority to proceed and do for the correction and for order of the said brother in such manner and form as by these ordinances may be done for the correction of the master.

ORDINANCES CONCERNING THE POOR FOLK OF THE HOSPITAL.

Also we ordain and establish, that there shall be twelve poor men kept always within the said Hospital, according to the foundation of it, and also twelve poor women, as there be at this present; and when the place of any of the poor there doth become void, by death, resignation, expulsion, or otherwise, according to the tenor of these ordinances, there shall be chosen, and put into the place or places so void, some other poor person, such as is either very aged, decrepid, blind, lame, or maimed, or that wanteth natural wit. And that none be admitted for a poor person within the same Hospital which hath of himself or herself whereon to live, or else friends that be able and willing to keep them. Respect also shall be had, as near as may be, that the person and persons so to be admitted be of good fame and name, and in no wise to be married. And that the poor persons to be placed in the said Hospital, according to these ordinances, shall enjoy their said place during their lives, so that they be such and do live so as is appointed by these ordinances.

Item, that when at any time hereafter any place or places of any of the poor there shall be void, by any such means as is aforesaid, the master shall put another in the same place or places within the space of 21 days next after such avoidance; which if he neglect to do, then it shall be lawful for the brother to appoint some one, of such condition as is before mentioned, and to put him, her, or them, into the place or places void, within the space of 14 days next after the expiring of the same 21 days. And if the brother do not the same within the space of the same 14 days, then it shall be lawful for the Mayor of Leicester for the time being to put into the same place or places another or others of such condition as is appointed by these ordinances. And we ordain, that the weekly wages which should have been paid to any poor person of the said Hospital, as well which shall decease (8*d.* for his or their funeral so deceasing being deducted), as also which shall be expelled or displaced out of the said Hospital according to these ordinances, shall, during the time that the place remaineth void, be put by the master into one of the boxes of the poor appointed by these ordinances; or, in absence of the master, by the brother, until some other be placed in the room that is void.

Item, that every poor person, at his or her first entry, shall receive a corporal oath, the master administering the same, in which he or they shall swear to be true to the Hospital, and not to reveal to any others which be not of the said Hospital any thing which may be prejudicial to the same; that he or she shall be obedient to the master, and in his absence to the brother, in all his and their good and lawful commandments; and also that he or she shall open and make known to the master, or in his absence to the brother, all that which he or she shall, from time to time, know that may turn to the detriment of the said Hospital; and shall likewise reveal to the master, or in his absence to the brother, or to the lawful visitor or visitors of the same Hospital for the time being, all other disorders concerning the said Hospital, or any member thereof, whereof he or she shall be examined by the said master, or in his absence by the brother, or by any such lawful visitor or visitors.

Item, that none shall be chosen, or put into the said Hospital, which hath any of the diseases hereafter named; that is to say, the leprosy, the French pox, the falling sickness, or any such other foul and loathsome disease as shall annoy the residue of the poor folk. And that if it shall fortune hereafter any of the poor folk of the said Hospital to be infected with any of such diseases, that then the person and persons so infected shall be removed out of the said Hospital without delay, either to some lesser house, or some such other place as he or she or they, or his, her, or their friends can provide for him, her, or them, so infected; and that every person so removed shall, during his or her life, receive, by the week, of the said Hospital, 8*d.* if the person so removed be a man, and a woman 7*d.*; and none other to be chosen into his or her place so removed until he or she departeth this life, or resigneth over the place, or committeth some such crime for which he or she is by these ordinances to be expelled.

Item, that if, by descent or gift, there do fall or come to any of the poor folk of the said Hospital any estate of inheritance of and in any lands or tenements or hereditaments, being of the clear yearly rent of 40*s.* or any moveable goods to the value of 20*l.* that then every such poor person shall by the master be put out of the Hospital, and another put into his or her place.

Item, that the poor person or persons which shall at any time hereafter be admitted into the said Hospital as is aforesaid shall be taken of such as have been inhabiting within the said town of Leicester, if there may be found among them any such as these ordinances do appoint fit for that place. If there be none such, it shall be lawful to take any such out of those towns where the lands or possessions of the said Hospital do lay, or elsewhere, so that the person or persons so to be taken be not of any other sort and condition than is appointed by these ordinances.

Item, that each one of the twelve poor men shall have, at the appointment of the master, a several chamber in the lower part of the Hospital, as now is used; and that every one of them do lay alone in his own chamber every night; and that none of them do lay or lodge any night out of his own chamber, either in the town of Leicester or elsewhere; nor shall absent himself from the Hospital the space of one whole day, but by the licence of the master, or in his absence of the brother. If any do otherwise lodge, or be otherwise absent, for the first fault he shall lose his stipend or wages appointed for one week; and for the second offence, he shall lose his stipend for four weeks; which sums of money shall be every Friday, by the master, put into the boxes made and set for the poor; and for the third offence, the master shall expel and put him out of the Hospital for ever. The said twelve poor men shall also have that kitchen which is at the end of their lodging, to make them fire in it, to warm them, to dress their meat, and to eat it there, either together or severally, as they shall think good; to which kitchen the poor women of the said Hospital, other than such as are permitted by these ordinances, shall have no access.

Item, that of the said twelve poor women before appointed three of them shall be called the keepers, and they shall be chosen and appointed by the master, and shall be such as have strength and skill apt to be keepers, and shall have charge of the keeping of all the other poor men and women, according as is appointed by these ordinances. And further we ordain, that the other nine of the said poor women shall, every of them, have her chamber alone to herself, in the higher part of the said Hospital, as now is used: and in the same chambers they shall severally lodge each of them alone every night. And that none of the said twelve poor women shall be absent from the Hospital any one night or whole day, but by the licence of the master, or in his absence of the brother; if they be otherwise absent, they shall be punished so as is already appointed for the absence of the men. The women also shall have the kitchen which is at the end of their lodging, for their only use, to have their fire in it, to warm them, to dress their meat, and to eat their meat in it, either together or severally, as they shall think good; to which kitchen the poor men shall have no access.

Item, that two of the strongest poor women shall be the keepers of the twelve poor men; and that each of them shall have the keeping of six men, as the chambers of the men do stand in order, so as one of the same women shall be keeper of the men which lodge on the East side, and the other of the men which lodge on the West side, in such sort as by the master shall be appointed. And that the other third woman, to be appointed by the master, shall be the keeper of all the said nine poor women; and she shall keep the kitchen appointed for the women, and shall have one of the chambers next adjoining to the said kitchen for her several chamber. The two keepers of the men shall keep the kitchen appointed for the men, and have for their lodging that one chamber which joineth to the said kitchen; each one of them lying there alone in a several bed.

Item, that these three keepers shall always diligently attend and wait upon these poor men and women which are committed to their charge, keeping them at all times as they ought to be kept, and serving them in all things which they have need of as they ought to be served. They shall make the beds of the weak, lame, and blind; they shall keep all their chambers clean; they shall prepare and dress all their meat and get their drink; they shall wash their clothes, make their fires in their kitchens; at due and convenient seasons light their lamp, and keep it burning the time appointed; and they shall keep not only the kitchens, but also all other places to which the poor men and poor women do resort, swept and clean from all filth, and from every thing which may breed any evil or unwholesome air. They shall also have delivered unto them, by inventory indented, one part of which shall remain with the master, the other with the keepers, all such stuff and implements as doth belong to the kitchen of the poor people, and all such other houshold stuff, goods, and implements, belonging to the said Hospital, as shall be committed to their charge and custody; all which they shall safely keep, according to the trust committed to them. And when any of those things do by wearing decay, they shall signify the same to the master, that, on the charge and cost of the Hospital, it may either be repaired or new brought for it, as he shall think good. They shall faithfully use, without waste, to the best profit of the Hospital, and commodity of the poor there, the wood, coal, salt, oatmeal, and such like things, which are committed to their keeping and disposition. They shall also see that the apparel and the goods of every one of the poor be clean, and safely kept within the several chambers of those poor to whom such apparel or goods do belong. They shall help the lame, sick, and weak, off and on with their clothes, when they do go to bed, and arise from it. When any of the poor committed to their charge is sick, they shall diligently serve and help them to provide such things for them as they are able to get, watch with them in the night, and do in all things as good keepers ought to do. The keepers shall neither ask nor receive any thing of any of the poor people for any service that they do towards them. The keepers shall also receive, at the master's hands, weekly, every Friday, the wages of all the poor committed to their keeping, and deliver over, without delay, to every one of the said poor, his or her due portion; and if any of the said poor, for want of wit, sight, or health, cannot dispose or bestow his or her portions to or for his or her necessary provision, then the keeper or keepers of such poor person or persons so being unable to make their own provision, shall, at the commandment of the master there for the time being, be bound to bestow the same portion or portions, weekly, to the most commodity of such person or persons so being unable as is aforesaid. When any of the said poor people do die, the keepers shall wind[1] him and them, and prepare them to the grave. If any of the keepers be found faulty touching any of the premises, it shall be lawful for the master to punish her by expulsion or otherwise, reasonable as the fault shall in his discretion seem to deserve.

Item, that the woman appointed to keep the nine poor women shall shut every night, and open every morning, that door which openeth and goeth into the lodging of the women. The two keepers appointed for the men shall likewise shut every night, and open every morning, the doors of the Hospital: and from the first day of April until the last day of September they shall open the doors at six of the clock in the morning, and shall shut them all at eight, or one half hour after eight, of the clock at night; from the first day of October until the last day of March the keepers shall open the doors at seven of the clock in the morning, and shut them at seven of the clock at night, or within one half hour after seven. From the times that the doors are appointed to be opened by these ordinances, none of all the doors shall be opened at any time for any cause, unless the master, or in his absence the brother, doth command it. The two keepers of the men shall keep the keys of the doors all the day, and especially all and every night, safely; they shall not deliver them out of their custody to any body but to the master, or in his absence to the brother, when he shall call for them. If the said keepers, or any of them, do open the doors at any other times or hours than as is before appointed, or do let into or out of the said Hospital any body at other hours than the doors are appointed by these ordinances to stand open, they shall be punished by the master with expulsion, or otherwise reasonably by his discretion, according to the quality of the fault.

Item, that if any of the keepers do fall so sick that she is not able to do her duty in her office, then the master, or in his absence the brother, shall appoint one of the nine women, which is strongest, to supply the place of the keeper that is sick during her sickness; and the new keeper shall have the weekly wages which belongeth to her that was so removed for sickness, and she so removed the weekly wages which belonged to the new keeper before she was put into that office. And if the sick woman do so recover health and strength that she be able to do the office of the keeper as she was, she shall be by the master restored to her old office, and the other woman to her place also again. But if none of the nine women be able to do that business, then the master shall put some other woman, where he can, which is both able and willing to take the pain, and put her in that office; and then shall the sick woman have her allowance of 7*d.* a-week, and be removed out of the Hospital, to abide for the time where she can till she have recovered her health, and be able to serve as before, or else till the place of some other of the poor women do become void by death, or by some other lawful means; and then the master shall again receive the said woman so removed as is aforesaid unto a room or place within the same Hospital. And to the end these three keepers may diligently attend upon their offices, we do ordain, that they, nor any of them, shall at any time be absent one hour from the Hospital but by the licence of the master, or in his absence of the brother, unless their absence be by occasion of necessary provision to be made touching some such thing as pertaineth to their charge within the Hospital; if they be otherwise absent, they shall be punished by expulsion, or otherwise reasonably, according to the quality of the fault, by the discretion of the master.

Item, that all the twelve poor men and twelve poor women shall be under the government of the master, and in his absence of the brother. They shall reverence and obey the master, and in his absence the brother, in all their godly, honest, and lawful commandments; if they do otherwise, they shall be punished by withdrawing of their wages, by the discretion of the master; and if they be incorrigible, then the master shall have power to displace them from their homes within the same Hospital.

Item, that every one of the said twelve men and twelve women, at their first entry into the said Hospital, shall be examined by the master or the brother of their faith and religion, to the end that, if they be well instructed, they may be not only confirmed therein, but trained to further increase of knowledge; or that, their ignorance being known, they may be the rather charged to be diligent to learn. And, that the brother, according to the special care and charge to him committed in that behalf, may be the more ready and diligent always to instruct them; and the said poor folk, for their part, shall shew themselves willing to learn; they shall also, at all such times as any public prayer appointed to be said or used is said or celebrated in that church which is called St. Martin's, within the said town of Leicester, resort to the same church, to hear and pray with the congregation there present the morning and evening prayer; to hear the sermons which are made there; to receive there also the holy Communion at times convenient, unless the master do appoint the same to be done by the brother in the chapel belonging to the said Hospital, in the church of St. Martin's aforesaid. The poor folk shall all sit together in those two seats which are appointed now for them; the men on the North side, and the women on the South side, of the West door of the same church. They shall also be all present every day, at seven of the clock in the evening, at the prayers made amongst them in the Hospital. None of all the poor men or women shall, at any of these prayers or sermons, be absent, but shall be and continue at them from the beginning to the ending. If any of them, without licence of the master or brother, be absent, or do not continue as is aforesaid, the brother shall signify the same to the master, to the end they may be punished or ordered by the master according to these ordinances. And as these twelve men and twelve women are thus to be trained in learning of godliness, so shall they endeavour themselves to live godly; they, nor any of them, shall be swearers nor cursed speakers, nor drunkards, nor haunters of taverns nor alehouses; they shall not commit adultery nor fornication, neither use any filthy or ungodly talk; they shall be no pickers nor stealers, nor liars, tell-talers, brawlers, chiders, quarrel-pickers, fighters, railers, slanderers, common beggars, dicers, carders, table-players, bowlers, or users of any such unthrifty and unlawful games; they shall be no hunters, hawkers, neither keepers of dogs nor hawks within or without the Hospital; but shall live godly, lovingly, and quietly, among themselves, towards all other persons lowly and humble; applying themselves to some such labour as they be able to do. If any of them do the contrary hereof, or offend any point in this article contained, they shall be punished by withdrawing their wages for a time, by the discretion of the master; and if they shall seem incorrigible, or otherwise the fault be very heinous, the master shall in such case displace them out of their rooms within the said Hospital.

Item, the master shall pay to every one of the twelve poor men, and to every of the three keepers, weekly, on the Friday in every week, 8*d*.; and to every one of the nine poor women, weekly, the same day, 7*d*. And between the 1st of November and the 20th of December the master shall, yearly, buy so much frize as shall make gowns for twelve of the poor people, only so that the twelve men shall have gowns one year, and the twelve women shall have gowns the other year following: the frize shall be bought, and the gowns made, at the cost and charge of the Hospital. Every poor man and woman shall, on the breast or sleeve of their gown, have and wear this letter, W. The master shall likewise, of the cost and charge of the Hospital, provide, yearly, for the twelve poor men, eight loads of wood, and four loads of coals; and for the poor women, seven loads of wood, and three loads of coals, to be burned and spent only for their necessity in their several kitchens within the Hospital. Also the master shall yearly provide sufficient oil for their lamps, to burn from the beginning of October until the end of February; also sufficient oatmeal and salt, to be occupied in both their kitchens, with brooms, and such other necessary furniture for their houses and kitchens as he shall think necessary. And if any of the poor men and women shall be so sick and impotent, that he or she be not able to go abroad to labour, or to gather for his or her necessary sustenance, nor have any friends by whose benevolence they may be relieved, then it shall be lawful for the master to make some allowance, at the charges of the Hospital, for fire, and such other necessaries as the said master shall think needful for that sick or impotent man or woman during the time of his or her sickness or impotence.

Item, that the master shall always hereafter provide some convenient house wherein the keepers shall wash the clothes of the poor men and women, and such kind of fuel for that purpose, as pease-straw, and such like, as now they use, at the charges of the Hospital. He shall also cause the keepers to refresh all the beds of the poor men and women with fresh straw twice every year; that is, in March and October. He shall likewise take, or cause to be taken, a view, once every year, of the beds of the twelve men and twelve women; and if he do find any that is unfurnished of that which is necessary, and doth understand that the same poor body so unfurnished hath, neither of himself, nor can have by labour or help of friends, any thing to supply that want, or, for folly or frowardness, will not provide for his or her necessity in that behalf, the master shall cause some necessary supply to be provided; and either levy the sum laid out for it upon the weekly wages of the poor for whom the provision is so made, or of the revenues of the Hospital, at his discretion.

Item, that none of the poor men shall go into the lodging of the women, nor any of the women (the keepers only excepted) into the lodging of the men. The poor men shall not suffer any strange women to come into the chambers of any of the twelve men; the poor women shall not suffer any strange men to come into the chamber of any of the women, unless they have two or one of the keepers with them all the time of their abode there. Whoso doth the contrary, shall be punished, by the discretion of the master, as in case of other offences is in these ordinances limited. And if any of the said twelve men or twelve women do contract marriage after their entry into the Hospital, the master shall put the persons contracted out of the Hospital, and put some such other meet person into their rooms and places as are by these ordinances appointed.

Item, that there shall be set two boxes, the one in the lodging of the women, the other in the lodging of the men, to receive such alms as God shall move them to give which do resort to the said Hospital. Every box shall have two locks of divers wards, with two keys for the same; one of which keys shall remain in the keeping of the elder poor men, the other in the keeping of the brother. The said boxes shall be opened twice every year, about the end of March and of September; and the money found in them shall be equally divided among the twelve men and twelve women, by the oversight of the master, and in his absence of the brother.

Item, that when any of the twelve men or twelve women do die, they shall make no testament concerning their moveable goods, to bequeath the same to any body, but shall leave all that they have in money and moveable goods to the use of the Hospital, which the keepers shall see safely kept and delivered to the master; and if any make any testament thereof, the same, for so much as it is contrary to these ordinances, shall be void. And if the keepers, or any of them, do either themselves embezzle any of the same goods, or suffer any other person to embezzle or convey the same away, and do not declare the same to the master, the keeper or keepers so offending, or concealing the fault, shall not only make full recompence for the things so taken away, but shall be put out of the said Hospital for ever. The goods which were the poor person's deceased, so delivered to the master, he shall have authority to give some part thereof to the keeper which kept the poor person so deceased since the time of his or her sickness; the residue he shall take, dispose, or sell, to those of the Hospital; and of all the money by him received upon any such sale, he shall make accompt at every audit, as by these ordinances he ought to do of other revenues of the Hospital.

Item, that all such sums of money as shall be due as penalties for breaking of any of these ordinances shall be, by the master, put into the boxes of the poor people, to be distributed equally among them all at the opening of the same boxes as is before ordained. And whensoever the master shall, by virtue of these ordinances, expel any of the said poor men or women for any crime, the party expelled shall never be admitted into the said Hospital again.

Item, that the master, or by his appointment the brother, shall, every year to come hereafter, read the statutes pertaining to the office and duties of the keepers and poor people, in the hearing of all the said poor people, about the feasts of Easter and St. Michael.

Item, that all and every such legacies, compositions, dispensations, and licences, as have been heretofore made or granted to the corporation of the said Hospital by any person or persons, or by any body politick, by what name or names soever the same was incorporate, or by what name or names soever such grants, legacies, compositions, dispensations, or licences, grant, legacy, composition, dispensation, or licence, were or was made, the same not being contrary to the laws of the realm now in force, shall be good, and remain in force, according to the intent and true meaning thereof.

Item, that if, upon any assurances or gifts made by any person or persons, body or bodies politic, of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any money or goods, to the said Hospital, or the incorporation thereof, at any time since the feast of St. Michael the Archangel, in the year of our Lord God one thousand five hundred seventy and two, or at any time from thenceforth to be made, there shall be any declaration made, in writing, by the party so giving or assuring, or by any other, by his, her, or their assent, to what use, intent, or purpose, it is meant or intended that the same assurance or gift should be, that then the writing and writings as well concerning the same gift or assurance, as also concerning the use and intent thereof, shall remain and be kept with the Evidences of the said Hospital. And that the intent and use so declared concerning any things so given, if the same be not repugnant to the laws of this realm, or derogatory to these ordinances, or any of them, shall be of like validity and force, to all intents and purposes, as these ordinances are and ought to be.

Provided always, that any thing in these ordinances, or any of them contained, shall not in any wise extend to alter the incorporation made and declared concerning the said Hospital by the said letters patent of our Sovereign Lady the Queen's Majesty that now is; but that the same incorporation, and the name thereof, shall continue and be in such manner and form as by the same letters patent is limited and declared, any thing in these ordinances or any of them contained, or any other thing whatsoever, to the contrary thereof, in any wise notwithstanding.

H. Huntingdon.
R. Sadler.
G. Bromley."

The statutes being thus made, the following act of parliament for confirming them was obtained:

"In the Parliament held at Westmynster, the 8th day of February, in the 18th yeare of the raigne of Queene Elizabeth, &c.

"Whereas, aboute the beginninge of the raigne of the Queene's Ma^{tie} most noble Father, of famous memory, Kinge Henry the Eight, one William Wigston, of the towne of Leicester, marchant of the Staple, of charitable and good disposition, meaninge to releive in those partes the poore people, did goe about to found and stablish for ever one Hospital in the said towne of Leicester; and for that he did not accomplishe the same duringe his life; his executors, for that purpose, by letters patent under the greate seale of England, dated the 13th day of July, in the 5th yeare of the raigne of the said late kinge, obtained lycence of the same kinge to found and erect the said Hospital, to consist of two perpetuall chaplaines and twelve poor men for ever, to be called by the name of 'The Hospital of William Wigston of Leicester' for ever; and further did incorporate the same, by the name of 'Chaplaines and Poore of the said Hospitall:' And allsoe the said late kinge did license the same executors to purchase landes and tenements of the annuall vallue of 40 markes, and to amortisse the same to the said chaplaines and poore, towardes their mainetynance for ever, as by the said letters patent more plainly may appeare, by vertue whereof the same Hospitall was founded: And whereas, after that our Soveraigne Lady the Queene's Ma^{tie} that now is, goeinge aboute not onely to confirme the said foundation, but allsoe to increasse the fame of her vertuous disposition, by her Highnes' letters patent, under the greate seale of England, dated the 7th day of May, in the 14th yeare of her Highnes' raigne, did further graunt and confirme, to the nowe chaplaines and poore of the said Hospitall, that the same should remaine in full and reall beinge for ever of two chaplaines and twelve poore people: And further, that as well the said chaplaines as poore for the tyme beinge, as they that should be chaplaines and poore people of the said Hospitall for ever from thenceforth, should be elected, ruled, ordered, and governed, by such orders, rules, and stattutes, as the right honorable Henry earle of Huntingdon, Ralph Sadler, knight, chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and George Bromley, esquire, her Highnes' attorney general of the said Duchy of Lancaster, or the survivors of them, should after that time make, in wrytinge, and to be sealed as well with her Highnes' Duchie seale, as with the severall seales of the said earle, chancellor, and attorney, or the survivors of them: And alsoe did, of her Highnes' further liberality, graunte divers lands, tenements, liberties, franchices, to the said chaplaines and poore people, as in her Highnes' said letters patent more planely doth or may appeare: For conformation and establishment whereof; be it enacted and ordained, by our said Soveraigne Lady the Queene, the Lordes spirituall and temporall, and the Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the said letters patent of our said Soveraigne Lady the Queene, and all and every the grauntes, articles, clauses, provisions, authorityes, jurisdictions, and ordinances, therein specified and graunted, and all and singular the ordinances made, or hereafter to be made, by the said earl of Huntingdon, sir Ralph Sadler, knight, and George Bromley, or the survivors of them, accordinge to the tenor of the said letters patent of our said Soveraigne the Queene, shall stand, remaine, and be good, avaleable, and effectuall in the lawe, to all intente and purposes, accordinge to the purporte, true intent, and meanynge of the same letters patent of our said Soveraigne Lady the Queene; saving to all and every person and persons, boddies pollitique and corporate, theire heires and successors, and to the heires and successors of every of them, other than our said Soveraigne Lady the Queene, her heires and successors, all such right, title, use, present interest, reversion, remaynder, entry, condition, rente, covenante, commons, profitts, commodityes, and hereditaments whatsoever, which they, or any of them, might, could, or ought to have, if this act had never been had or made."

To this act is annexed the certificate of Anthony Mason, clerk of the parliaments, dated March 22, 1576-7, that it is a true copy.

The following document, particularizing the benefactions of the earl of Huntingdon, is copied from the original enrolment in the high Court of Chancery:

"Whereas our Sovereign Lady Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. hath, by her Highness's letters patent, bearing date May 17, in the 14th year of her reign, given power and licence to all and every person and persons that will to give lands, tenements, or any other hereditaments, to the chaplains and the poor of 'The Hospital of William Wigston in the town of Leicester, of the foundation of the said William Wigston,' and to their successors; and also hath given power and licence to the said chaplains and poor to receive and enjoy the said gifts so given to them and their successors for ever, as by the said letters patent more at large doth appear. And further; whereas, by authority aforesaid, among other ordinances concerning the said Hospital, it is ordained, that it shall be lawful to any person that giveth any thing in manner and form abovesaid to declare, by writing under his hand and seal, the use or uses, purpose and purposes, for which he giveth any such gifts to the said chaplains and poor, and to their successors; and that the same his declaration, by writing so made, shall be of as good force and value, to bind and charge the said chaplains and poor, and their successors, in respect to the thing, things, and gifts so given, to the same use, uses, and purposes, to which it is or shall be so given, appointed, or declared to be used or bestowed, as any other ordinance is or shall be, which is or shall be made by authority aforesaid, or any thing touching the same Hospital, so long as they the said chaplains and poor, and their successors, do or shall possess and enjoy the same gift or gifts: And whereas I, Henry earl of Huntingdon, lord Hastings, Hungerford, Boutreaux, Mollens, and Moyles, knight of the most honourable order of the Garter, Lord High President of the Queen's Majesty's Council established in the North parts, minding not only the bettering of the estate of the said chaplains and poor, and their successors, but also the good and diligent information of the inhabitants of the town and shire of Leicester in the true knowledge of God and Christian religion, have, by my deed indented bipartite, bearing date the 11th day of October, in the 18th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady Elizabeth the Queen's Majesty, given and granted unto the said chaplains and poor of the said Hospital of William Wigston in the said town of Leicester, of the foundation of the said William Wigston, and to their successors for ever, one yearly rent-charge of 32*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* of lawful English money, issuing out and forth of one close commonly called The Ash Close, and out and forth of one meadow near thereunto adjoining, late parcel of the possession of the late dissolved monastery of St. Mary in the Meadows of Leicester, near to the said town of Leicester, in the county of Leicester, now or late in the tenure or occupation of William Bradgate, or of his assigns; and also one other yearly rent-charge of 24*l.* of lawful English money, issuing out and forth of one close called Pynder's Close, and of a certain meadow or certain parcels of meadow ground belonging to the said close called Pynder's Close, or demised, or let with the same for one entire rent, now or late in the tenure of one Richard Stanford, or of his assigns, and late parcel of the possession of the said late dissolved monastery of St. Mary; and also all that my annual and yearly rent-charge of 10*l.* of lawful English money, with the appurtenances, issuing and going out of all those lands, tenements, and hereditaments, now or late in the tenure or occupation of Phillip Freeke, or of his assigns, and late parcel of the possessions of the said late dissolved monastery of St. Mary, as further by my said deed indented bipartite it doth and may appear: All which said rents, so by me granted by my said deed indented bipartite, do amount in the whole to the total yearly sum of 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* I the said earl do now, by these presents, declare my meaning and intent, in what sort and to what use and purpose my mind is, to have the said yearly rent by me granted to be bestowed and employed for ever; that is to say; First, that the one of the said chaplains, called the master of the Hospital, and his successors, or his sufficient deputy or deputies by him or his successors for the time being lawfully appointed, shall yearly for ever receive the said yearly rents by me granted, when the same shall be due by my aforesaid grant; and shall also pay and disburse the same yearly as ensueth; that is to say, that he the said master and his successors shall yearly pay, or cause to be paid, to the schoolmaster of the Free-school in Leicester, and his successors for ever, the sum of 10*l.* of lawful money, parcel of the said yearly rent by me granted, at the feast of the Annunciation of our Lady St. Mary the Virgin, and St. Michael the Archangel, by even portions; and shall also yearly pay to the other chaplain of the said Hospital, who is by the aforesaid ordinances named to be the brother, the sum of 30*l.* parcel also of the said yearly rent by me granted, at two times in the year; that is to say, at the feast of the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, and St. Michael the Archangel, yearly, by even portions, on these conditions following; first, that the said brother and his successors shall and do suffer his other fellow-chaplain, called the master of the Hospital, and his successors, quietly to occupy, enjoy, and have, to the proper use of the said master and his successors, all that lease for term of years yet to come of the tithe corn of the South Fields by Leicester, with all commodities and profits thereunto belonging, which was given jointly to the said chaplains by the last will and testament of Agnes Wigston, late wife of William Wigston, founder of the said Hospital: And if the said other chaplain called the brother and his successors shall or do not suffer the said master and his successors quietly to enjoy the said lease and commodities aforesaid during the term of years expressed in the said lease, then I will, that the other brother called the master and his successors shall pay to the said brother and his successors yearly, during the said term, but only the sum of 20*l.* of lawful money, parcel of the said yearly rents by me granted; and the other 10*l.* parcel of the said 30*l.* I will that the said master and his successors do yearly receive and retain in his and their own hands to his and their own proper uses, for his and their better maintenance and increase of living in the said Hospital, during all such time as he shall be letted by the other chaplain or his successors to receive and take the profits and commodities of the said lease during the said term; and after the term, the said chaplain and his successors to have yearly 30*l.* parcel of the sum aforesaid, in manner and form above specified. Secondly, I will that the said brother and his successors, to whom the said stipend of 30*l.* or 20*l.* shall in manner and form aforesaid be paid, shall be a continual resident preacher in the town of Leicester; and that he and they, and his successors, shall preach in the church called St. Martin's, in Leicester aforesaid, every Sunday in the year, except that he or they be sick, or that the said church shall be occupied upon any of those days by any other preacher; and also, that he and they do preach every Wednesday and Friday, or upon two other days, every week, in the said church of St. Martin's, at such hours as the master of the Hospital and his successors shall appoint, unless upon any of those Sundays or other days the place be by some other preacher supplied, or that he shall be letted by sickness, or other lawful cause against his will: Also I will, that the said master of the said Hospital and his successors do and shall yearly pay the sum of 10*l.* of lawful money, towards the finding of certain scholars which do or shall set their mind and apply themselves to the earnest study of Divinity, and to become preachers of the Gospel of Christ in the Church of England; which said sum shall be in this form following bestowed; which is, I will, that unto two scholars, such as I the said earl during my life do or shall name or appoint, of which one of them to be scholar and student in the University of Cambridge, the other a scholar and student in the University of Oxford, to either scholar 3*l.* yearly, at the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, and St. Michael, by even portions; which said exhibitions the said master shall pay; and every of the said scholars so standing shall only enjoy the same for five years, and no longer: Also I will, that the master and his successors shall pay, for ever, unto other two scholars, born in the town of Leicester, or Leicestershire, such as have but poor parents, and apt to learn, and shall be thought meet to become preachers of the Gospel, and able to be taught of the schoolmaster of Leicester in some of the forms which are appointed to be at his teaching in the school of Leicester; whose parents or friends will faithfully promise that the same their children shall, by their good wills, follow their studies in all knowledge meet for preachers of the Gospel, and that the said children shall be kept and found as scholars of the school of Leicester, and to be ordered and governed there by such orders and rules as are for that school appointed; to either of the said two scholars, or to their parents to be bestowed upon them or to their uses, the sum of forty shillings by the year, at the aforesaid two feasts, by even portions; which said exhibition of forty shillings to every of the said two poor scholars shall only be paid to any one scholar so learning in the school of Leicester for the space of five years only, and no longer: And I will, that at the end of the said five years the one of these two scholars shall go to Cambridge, the other to Oxford, there to study; and, being in the said Universities, shall either of them have the exhibition of 3*l.* for such time, and in like manner and form, and upon like conditions and considerations, as such scholar as is or shall be in the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge as is before said shall have and observe: And I the said earl do ordain and will, and my mind is, that continually for ever there shall be two scholars at the said Universities, and two other scholars at the said school of Leicester, to have the aforesaid stipends, amounting in all to 10*l.* yearly, paid to them by the master of the said Hospital in Leicester and his successors for ever, for like times, and in like sort, order, and conditions, and for the same considerations, as are before expressed and appointed for the said payment and order of the said scholars and their studies; so that for ever hereafter there shall be two scholars in the two Universities, and two scholars in the school of Leicester, which shall yearly have and receive the aforenamed exhibition towards their finding at the hands of the master of the Hospital aforesaid and his successors for ever: And further, I do order and appoint, that if the room of any of the said scholars shall be vacant at any time, either by the end of five years appointed for any scholar to have any such exhibition, or by death, or by departure from learning and study before limited, or for any other reasonable cause, then I the said earl, during my life, to have the nomination and placing of every scholar in the room or rooms so void; and after my death, my mind is, and I do order, that the said master and brother of the said Hospital, and their successors, shall have the nomination and placing of every of the said scholars to receive any of the said exhibitions in form aforesaid: And if they the said chaplains cannot agree in the placing and naming of any scholars in any of the said rooms, then I ordain, that the one of them, with the assent of the mayor of the said town of Leicester for the time being, shall for that time have the nomination and placing of the scholar to be appointed to the room of a scholar then so void; and if the said two chaplains, or one of them with the assent of the said mayor, shall not, within one month next after every avoidance of the room of any of the aforesaid scholars for any cause, name, place, and appoint, one other scholar in the same place, according to the true intent above specified, that then I will, and do ordain, that my heirs shall, at every such avoidance, and for every such default, name and appoint the scholar or scholars then to be placed, so the same nomination and placing be had and executed within one month next after the default of the said two chaplains. I will also, and ordain, that the said master of the said Hospital for the time being and his successors do, for ever hereafter, yearly employ and bestow the sum of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* either in money upon the 24 poor people of the aforesaid Hospital, to be equally divided amongst them, or else to buy and give 12 gowns of frize yearly to these 12 poor folk of the same Hospital which are not provided for, but want liveries every other year; so that, by this gift of mine yearly, together with that which is already allowed by the ordinance of the Founder of the said Hospital, every one of the 24 poor people shall have one livery: And I will, that the said master of the Hospital and his successors, every year, at the audit in which he maketh the accompt of the revenues of the Hospital, do shew, in writing, unto the auditor appointed, the true and faithful distribution and payment of all the portions above mentioned, according to this my order and declaration. And I do further order and declare, that the master of the said Hospital and his successors, for and in consideration of their travel, care, and diligence to be used herein, shall, towards the increase of his living, take and keep to his and their uses all the residue of the said yearly rents by me granted, which shall remain after the sums and stipends before appointed shall be paid as is before said, the which said residue doth and will amount yearly to the sum of 10*l.*; so that the master and his successors for the time being shall do his endeavour and diligence to the due execution to this my ordinance, intent, and declaration; or if he make any wilful default therein in any year, by the judgment of the visitor of the said Hospital, then I will, for that year he shall lose the benefit of the sum of 10*l.* and shall bestow the same upon the poor of the said Hospital, as shall be limited and appointed by the visitor of the said Hospital for the time being, for that year's profits only when such default shall be in the said master. In witness whereof, I the said earl to this my present writing have set my seal, given the 11th day of October, in the 18th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady Queen Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the Faith, &c. H. HUNTINGDON.

Capt' & recognit' coram me Will' Cordell milite, magistro Rotulorum curie cancellarie domine regine decimo sexto die Novembris, anno regni dicte domine regine decimo nono, in Ædibus de le Rolles.

WILLIAM CORDELL.

Elizabeth[1] wife of John Whatton, esq. of the Newark, appears to have been the next benefactor to this Hospital, by adding to it two small houses[2]; which her death, in 1638, prevented her from endowing. But her charitable intentions were directed to be carried into effect by her husband, as appears by the following extract from his last will:

"Item, I give, to be issuing out of my close or garden called The Shire-hall Close, in Leicester aforesaid, the sum of 7*l.* yearly for ever, to be paid into the hands of the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, of the borough of Leicester for the time being, at the 25th day of March, and 29th day of September, by equal portions, to be by the said mayor and justices distributed as is hereafter expressed (that is to say); 7*l.* yearly for ever for the maintenance of one poor widow placed, or to be placed, in one of the two houses in the New Hospital in Leicester, called Wigston's Hospital, which two houses Elizabeth my late wife, deceased, did build there, with the consent of the then master of the said Hospital; and I desire, the other house of those two houses may be for her to lay her fuel in, or other necessaries; the money to be paid to the said widow by 2*s.* 6*d.* a week, or 10*s.* a month, at the discretion of the said mayor and justices; and the other 10*s.* residue of the 7*l.* I desire one-half of it may be given to the master of the said Hospital, desiring his countenance and assistance that the poor widow be not wronged, and the other half of the 10*s.* to be for the mayor and justices to drink in wine together. The widow to be placed in the said house, after it is empty or void, to be chosen by Katherine my now wife, during her natural life, and afterwards by the said mayor and justices for the time being, within two months next after the said house shall be at any time empty or void; and in the mean time, during that vacancy, I will, the said 2*s.* 6*d.* a week shall be given amongst the other women then dwelling in the said Hospital: And if it should happen that default should be made of payment of the said 7*l.* out of the said Shire-hall close, by the space of one whole year or more, then I do give the deeds and evidences belonging to the same to the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, and their successors for ever, for the several uses aforesaid: And if it shall happen that such a widow cannot be allowed of or suffered to live in the said house, then my will is, that 6*l.* of the said 7*l.* shall be by the said mayor and justices of the said borough bestowed for the maintenance of one poor widow in some other place; and the other 20*s.* I will, shall be given to ten poor widows within the said borough, the 20th day of December every year[1]."

Thomas Lovet held the manor-house of Fawson, and four oxgangs and a half, for three lives, paying yearly 2*l*.

Allington. Thomas Lovet, or Mrs. Peete, paid for lands there 4*l*.

Harlaxton. Sir Daniel Delyve held lands there for three lives, at 1*l*. 4*s*. per annum; which he set out to under-tenants for 39*l*. 7*s*. 4*d*. per annum. His fine was 210*l*.

Castle Carleton. Mr. Nicholas Thornedicke, by lease, dated Sept. 29, 6 Eliz. held the whole manor of Castle Carleton for 99 years, paying yearly 27*l*. 3*s*. 7½*d*. But, 12 Jac. I. Mr. Thornedicke, of his free will, for better relief of the poor of the Hospital, granted a rent of 10*l*. 8*s*. out of the said manor.

Staffordshire.

Horningloe. Thomas Clarke, of Horningloe, in the parish of Burton upon Trent, held one messuage, and a farm containing 50 acres and 3 roods, for three lives, paying yearly 3*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. His fine was 20*l*.

Total, 157*l*. 16*s*. 11¼*d*.

June 19, 1656, Thomas Wadland, of the Newark, Leicester, gent. sworn; saith, that it appears, by decree of Chancery, made Nov. 27, 22 Car. I. that the Hospital had antiently two yard and a half lands in Brankingsthorpe, in the parish of St. Mary's Leicester, which was in lease to Mr. John Danet and his ancestors; and that the said lordship being long since inclosed, there was set out to the Hospital 50 acres; and that, by decree in the Exchequer 3 Car. I. upon disafforesting the Forest of Leicester there were 25 acres in the Forest allowed to Mr. Danet, in lieu of 15 yard lands in Brankingsthorpe, the two and a half yard lands held by the said Mr. Danet being part of the said 15 yard lands; and that he never heard that any part of the said 25 acres is set out for the said Hospital.

Some depositions taken Nov. 4, 1656.

There was about 40 acres of land in possession of Mr. Danet, and another plot of ground, called Ryplot, of about ten acres, and two little closes containing about five acres.

Sept. 8. By several, it appeared that there was paid weekly to each of the poor men, 16*d*.; and, whilst the South Field tithes belonged to the Hospital, they used to have 4*d*. a week more.

Joan Taylor, one of the poor, says she has been in the house 24 years; and when she came first the poor women received but 11*d*. a week each, till Dr. Clarke augmented 3*d*. a-week a-piece.

The following titles were taken by Mr. Carte from a bundle of papers in possession of Mr. T. Palmer:

A Rental of the lands in 1561, 1562, out of which the schoolmaster is paid.

Two surveys of the Hospital lands at Norton,

Two inventories of the goods of the Hospital.

A Terrier of the Hospital lands in Belvoir, Denton, and Harleston.

An account of the lands at Harlaxton.

The title of Wigston's Hospital to the South Field tithes, and a note of writings relating thereto, delivered to Mr. Clarke by Mr. Thomas Wadland.

Nov. 18, 1656, on the humble petition of the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses of Leicester, to the House of Commons; it was ordered, that Mr. Stanley do bring in a Bill, to the purpose mentioned in their Petition, touching the Hospital of Leicester[1]. The Bill was prepared November 29; read the first time Dec. 2; a second time Dec. 9, and referred to a Committee; who were directed also to consider the Petition of Richard Lee, Master of Wigston's Hospital, with that of William Simms, Public Lecturer of the Borough of Leicester, and Confrater of Wigston's Hospital[2]. The Bill was reported Feb. 6, 1656-7, and several new Governors added[3]. It was read the third time Feb. 16; and ordered "to be offered to his Highness the Lord Protector for his consent[4];" which was given, by the Protector in person, June 9, 1657[5].

The title of it is, "An Act for the settling and regulating of the Hospital called Wigston's Hospital, in the Borough of Leicester, and establishing of the Government thereof;" and an attested copy of it is here given:

"Whereas one William Wigston, deceased, who was heretofore Mayor of the Borough of Leicester, in the county of Leicester, heretofore, in or about the fifth year of Henry the Eighth, late King of England, by licence of the said king, founded an Hospital in the said Borough, now commonly called Wigston's Hospital, consisting of two chaplains and twenty-four poor people: And the late Queen Elizabeth, for the preservation of the said charitable use, re-founded the said Hospital, and incorporated the same by the name of "The Chaplains and Poor of the Hospital of William Wigston, in the Town of Leicester, of the Foundation of the said William;" and divers orders were confirmed by Act of Parliament concerning the ordering of the said Hospital, the said Hospital being endowed by the said founder of divers manors and lands, which, according to a true and full value, are worth above 1200*l.* by the year, and a very considerable part thereof employed to the relief of the poor: Be it enacted, by his Highness the Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and by the present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the said Hospital is hereby, and for ever hereafter shall be, incorporated, to all intents and purposes, by the name or names of 'The Chaplains and Poor of the Hospital of William Wigston, in the Borough of Liecester:' And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that, for the government and regulation of the said Hospital, there shall be a perpetual succession of persons of piety, and known integrity, to be trustees and governors thereof; who shall keep and use a common seal for the said Hospital in the chest appointed for that purpose, standing in the Evidence chamber thereof; which chest shall have two locks, with several wards and keys, one key whereof shall be always in the custody of the mayor of the Borough of Leicester, and the other of the master of the said Hospital, or his confrater, and shall not be opened but in the presence of eight or more of the said governors: And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the mayor of Leicester for the time being, Edward Whalley esquire, sir Christopher Pack, knight, alderman of the City of London, Thomas Beaumont, Francis Hacker, William Quarles, Thomas Pochen, Thomas Haselrigg, Thomas Charnells, William Purefoy, Henry Smith, Henry Markham, esquires; William Stanley, Richard Ludlam, Edmund Cradock, Edward Johnson, Edward Billers, Anthony Major, Alexander Baker, Samuel Wanley, Robert Hicklin, gentlemen, and Richard Lee, clerk, be, and are hereby, constituted and appointed the first trustees and governors of the said Hospital, to all intents and purposes; which said trustees and their successors, before they enter upon the execution of the trust and powers by this Act vested in them, shall, before two justices of the peace, take an oath, which said justices are hereby authorized and empowered to administer the same, in these words: "You shall swear to be true and faithful in the execution of the office of trustee and governor of the Hospital of William Wigston in Leicester; and that you will not, by yourself, or any other in trust for you, or to your benefit, take any lease or leases of the said Hospital, but will to your best skill, knowledge, and power, impartially perform the trust committed to you, and procure the profit and commodity of the Hospital by all lawful means:" And when and so often as it shall happen that any of the said trustees and governors shall die, those that survive, or the greater number, shall and are hereby authorized to elect other fit persons, men of piety, known integrity and ability, to be joined with them, so as the number may be always fifteen to continue a succession: and be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the said trustees and governors, and their successors, or the greater number of them, shall and may make such bye-laws and ordinances as they shall judge convenient and necessary for the better government of the said Hospital, to have equal force with any statutes or constitutions heretofore made for the same; and shall and may meet as often as they shall judge it convenient for the good of the said Hospital: And they, and their successors, by the names of the trustees and governors of the chaplains and poor of the Hospital of William Wigston in Leicester, or the greater number of them, shall and may purchase any lands or tenements to the only benefit and advantage of the same: And they or their successors, or the greater part of them, and no other, shall or may demise or lease the manors, lands, and tenements, which now are or hereafter shall be belonging to the said Hospital, under their common seal, so as the same exceed not the term of one and twenty years in possession, and not in reversion, upon reasonable improved rents, and not upon fines, any law, statute, or custom, to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding: Provided always, and be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that none of the manors, lands, or tenements, belonging to the said Hospital, shall be demised or set in gross to any person or persons whatsoever, but that the present occupiers of the respective manors, lands, or tenements, shall be admitted immediate tenants of the Hospital, so as they shall give a full value of the same, to the best advantage of the said Hospital: And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that as well the said Hospital, as also all the manors, messuages, lands, tenements, rents, and hereditaments, with their appurtenances whatsoever, belonging to or parcel of the possessions of the said Hospital, shall be and are hereby vested, settled, and established, in and upon the said trustees and governors, and their successors, for the use and benefit of the chaplains and poor of the said Hospital and their successors for ever: And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all and every person and persons whatsoever that now have or shall have any seal or seals, deeds, evidences, books, or other goods, of and belonging to the said Hospital, shall forthwith deliver the same unto the said trustees and governors, or the greater number of them: And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the said trustees and governors, and their successors, or the greater number of them, shall pay, or cause to be paid, yearly, to the master of the said Hospital, and his successors, the sum of forty pounds, in full discharge of all other demands and dues to him as master of the same, to be a salary for performance of the duty of his place, and to be paid quarterly, at the four usual days of payment; and the said trustees and governors, and their successors, shall in like manner pay, or cause to be paid, to the confrater of the said Hospital, yearly, the sum of forty and three pounds, as it is already settled upon him: And be it further enacted, by authority aforesaid, that the trustees and governors of the said Hospital, and their successors, shall and are hereby authorized, upon the improvement of the revenues of the said Hospital, to enlarge the buildings thereof, and increase the salaries of the master and his confrater, and the number and maintenance of the poor that are or shall be therein placed, and for such other pious, charitable, and good uses, as are limited, constituted, and appointed, by certain orders and rules established in the fourteenth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and by all and every such bye-founders and benefactors as are or shall be directed, limited, or appointed, respectively; provided always, that the respective salaries to the master and his confrater appointed in this Act shall not be construed to take from them their dwellings in the said Hospital, according to the statutes: And for the better execution of the several trusts in this Act mentioned and ordained, be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the said trustees and governors, and their successors, or the greater number of them, shall appoint the master or confrater of the said Hospital for the time being, so as the said master or confrater be always resident in the said Hospital, and not one of the trustees or governors thereof, to receive the rents of the said Hospital, and defray the charges and disbursements thereof, according to such rules and directions as he shall from time to time receive from the trustees or governors, and their successors, or the greater number of them; which said master or confrater shall keep a true and perfect register of the receipts, disbursements, acts and doings, relating to the said Hospital; and shall, once in every year (that is to say, the first Tuesday in April), make a true and just account thereof to the trustees and governors, and their successors, or the greater number of them, which shall be kept in a book fairly written for that purpose, and being approved of and subscribed by the trustees and governors, or the greater number of them, shall be put into the chest, and remain with the public seal and evidences therein belonging to the said Hospital; which said master or confrater shall have allowed to him, for his pains herein, such additional salary as the said trustees and governors, and their successors, or the greater number of them, shall appoint, so as the same exceeds not the sum of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: And it is further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the said trustees and governors, and their successors, or the greater number of them, shall at all times hereafter have the full power and authority of electing, placing, and upon just cause of the displacing, of the poor of the said Hospital, and also of the displacing of the master and his confrater, who are the chaplains in this Act named, for scandal and misdemeanours by them, or either of them, done or committed: Saving to his Highness the Lord Protector, and his successors, the donations of the places of the master and brother of the said Hospital, called by the names of the chaplains of the same, so often as they shall become void by death, resignation, or deprivation; which chaplains shall be able ministers of the Gospel, and men of godly life and conversation; and before they are admitted into their respective places, the trustees and governors of the said Hospital shall, and they are hereby empowered to, administer an oath unto them, in these words following, that is to say; 'You shall swear to be true and faithful in the execution of the office of   in Leicester; and that you will not, by yourself, or any other in trust for you, or to your benefit, take any lease or leases of the said Hospital, but will, to your best skill, knowledge, and power, impartially perform the trust committed to you, and shall procure the profit and commodity of the Hospital by all lawful means.'

Examined, Feb. 18, 1657, by Samuel Horneby."

A warrant occurs, dated July 19, 1661, from Charles lord Seymour of Trowbridge, Chancellor of the Duchy, to Mr. John Angel, clerk, and Robert Tyringham, gentleman, to be auditors of the Hospital accompts.

A lease, dated Oct. 6, 1663, made to William Henworth, of Burton upon Trent, in the county of Stafford, butcher, his executors, administrators, and assigns, of a meadow-ground called Brassingcote Hurst, alias Brissingcote Hurst, in the parish of Burton upon Trent, containing about 30 acres late in tenure of Daniel Brown; habend' to the said William Henworth, his heirs, &c. for the lives of Robert Brown, William Brown, and Anne Brown, being three of the children of Daniel Brown, of Burton upon Trent, clothier; the said Robert Brown being of the age of ten years, William of three years, and Anne of fifteen years. Reddend', yearly, at the master's house, 10*l.* at Lady-day and Michaelmas, and one couple of fat capons, or 2*s.* in money, at Michaelmas, with clause of re-entry if the rent be unpaid for 20 days, &c. Worth, per annum, 30*l.*

A lease, dated Oct. 8, 1663, made to Dorothy wife of Thomas Mollibarre, her executors, administrators, and assigns, of one messuage or tenement, and one farm, consisting of divers closes, lands, arable, meadow, and pasture, in Horningloe, co. Stafford, and three acres of meadow, called the Trent meadow, in Horningloe, in the parish of Burton upon Trent, in tenure of Sarah Clarke and Thomas Seale (except all timber-trees); habend' to Dorothy wife of Thomas Mollibarre and her assigns, during the lives of the said Dorothy wife of the said Thomas Mollibarre, and Dorothy Seale and Mary Seale, being two of the children of Thomas Seale, of Horningloe, yeoman; Dorothy Seale being of the age of ten years, and Mary Seale of the age of six years. Rent, 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per annum, at Michaelmas and Lady-day; with clause of re-entry at 20 days, &c. Worth, per annum, 20*l.*

A lease, dated Sept. 15, 1664, was made to William Vincent, of Creaton, co. Northampton, gent. of a messuage, with the homestead, and four oxgangs, and the half of one oxgang, in Foston, co. Lincoln (except all timber-trees); habend' to the said William Vincent of Creaton and his heirs, for the lives of himself, and William Vincent of Great Sheepy, father of William Vincent of Creaton, and of William Vincent the youngest, being the eldest son and heir apparent of William Vincent of Creaton; the said William Vincent the youngest being of the age of half a year. Rent, 2*l.* 10*s.* per annum, payable at Michaelmas and Lady-day, at the master's house; and a clause of re-entry for want of payment at 40 days. Worth, per annum, 18*l.*

A lease, dated Aug. 2, 1672, made to Robert Archer, gent. and his assigns, of one messuage or tenement, with the home-close, orchard, and backside adjoining, in Hungry Harbury, in tenure of Thomas Cox the elder, of Hungry Harbury, and one yard land in Hungry Harbury, co. Warwick, in tenure of Thomas Cox senior (except all timber-trees); habend' to Robert Archer and his heirs and assigns, for the lives of Thomas Cox senior, Richard Cox and Thomas Cox junior, sons of Thomas Cox senior; Richard Cox being 21, and Thomas Cox 15, years of age. The rent 30*s.* per annum, at Lady-day and Michaelmas; with clause of re-entry at 20 days for non-payment, and a covenant from the chaplains and poor, at any time within five years (if Mr. Richard Clarke should so long live and continue master, &c.), at the request and charges of Robert Archer, to make a new lease to Mr. Archer; for, in a lease of this house and yard-land, made heretofore to Thomas Cox, a Terrier is annexed to that lease.

A lease, dated Sept. 4, 1673, made to William Welby, esq. of one messuage in Denton, co. Lincoln, and of one close adjoining to the said messuage, on the North side thereof, and of three oxgangs and a half of land, arable, meadow, and pasture, in Denton, particularly mentioned in a Terrier annexed to the lease (except all timber-trees, &c.); habend' to William Welby and his heirs, for the lives of William Leivesley of Allington, &c.

A lease, dated Aug. 28, 1679, made to Richard Grant, gent. of a capital messuage, and seven oxgangs of land, leys, meadow, pasture, and common, cum pertinentiis, in Allington, in tenure of Thomas Marryot, and of a cottage, cum pertinentiis, in Allington, in tenure of John Day (all trees of oak, ash, and elm, and other timber-trees, with liberty to fall, cut down, and carry away the same, always excepted); habend' to Richard Grant and his heirs, for the life of the said Richard Grant, and Thomas Tresham, only son of William Tresham, of Bottesford, gent.; and of Thomas Sills, eldest son of Richard Sills, of Bottesford, yeoman (Thomas Tresham being about 27, and Thomas Sills about 15 or 16 years old.) Reddend', yearly, at the master's house, 4*l.* 10*s.* at Michaelmas and Lady-day, and also one couple of fat capons, or 2*s.* in money; and one couple of fat hens, or 12*d.* in money, at Lady-day; with clause of re-entry for non-payment at 30 days. Worth, per annum, 4*l.*

A lease, dated March 29, 1682, made to Maurice Dalton, Thomas Fisher, and Robert Cowles, of the capital mansion or manor-house in Foston, co. Lincoln, in tenure of Thomas Lovett, and four oxgangs and a half of arable land, meadow, and pasture, to the said capital messuage, manor, or mansion-house belonging in Foston, in tenure of Thomas Lovett, (except all timber-trees); habend' to the said Maurice Dalton, Thomas Fisher, and Robert Cowles, and their heirs, for the lives of Thomas Lovett, party to this deed, and of William Lovett brother to the said Thomas, and of Thomas Welby, gent. youngest son of William Welby, late of Denton, co. Lincoln, esq. deceased. Reddend', yearly, 3*l.* 8*s.* at Michaelmas and Lady-day. Provided that if the lessess should not duly pay rent, and truly observe the covenants, then the lease to be void. Worth, per annum, 18*l.*

A lease, dated Sept. 14, 1682, made to Nathaniel Garthwaite senior, of Grantham, co. Lincoln, of a messuage, with the homestead thereto adjoining, and several closes, plots, and parcels of arable land, leys, meadow, pasture, and greensward ground, being 64 acres and a half, in Harlexton, co. Lincoln, and all other their lands and hereditaments in Harlexton (except all trees of oak, ash, and elm, and other timber-trees); habend' to Nathaniel Garthwaite senior and his heirs, for the lives of Mary wife of Nathaniel Garthwaite senior, and of Nathaniel Garthwaite junior, son and heir apparent of Nathaniel Garthwaite senior, and of Edward Garthwaite second son of Nathaniel Garthwaite senior, under the yearly rent of 5*l.* payable at Michaelmas and Lady-day. Worth per annum, 40*l.*

The Reckoning and Accompt of Edward Palmer, made to John Pike, Clerk, Master of the Hospital of William Wigston in the Town of Leicester, of the Foundation of the same William, of all the Rents and Revenues of the said Hospital, due at Michaelmas 1686, and Lady-day 1687, and of all Monies received by the Accomptant for the said Hospital at and after Michaelmas 1686, until Michaelmas 1687, and of all the Accomptant's Disbursements for the said Hospital, as followeth; (this Accompt not comprising any of the Rents received for Michaelmas 1687.)—Of which the Accomptant dischargeth himself as followeth:

Note.—In the time of Edward VI. the lamp-money ceased to be paid.

A lease occurs, dated Oct. 12, 1663, made to Edward Palmer senior, gent. of one close of pasture, called Humberstone gate close, containing three acres, in the parish of St. Margaret, near the Borough of Leicester, in tenure of Edward Palmer senior, lying next the land of Edward Palmer senior towards the West part; one plot of ground, called Sandpit-lane close, in the parish of St. Margaret, next the land of Thomas Blunt, esq. mayor of Leicester, towards the North, and the land of Robert Green towards the South; and one other close, called Barkby-lane close, in the parish of St. Margaret, in tenure of Jane Springthorp, widow; and of one plot of meadow, containing one acre, in a certain meadow, called Borrowsy meadow, alias Neathouse meadow, in the parish of St. Mary, Leicester, and of Aileston, or one of them, in tenure of Edward Palmer senior. Habend' to the said Edward Palmer, for the lives of Edward Palmer junior, gent. Thomas Palmer, and Jane Palmer, children of the said Edward Palmer senior. Rent, per annum, 3*l.* at Lady-day and Michaelmas; and a clause of re-entry for non-payment 30 days, if no sufficient distress be upon the land. Worth, per annum, 6*l.*—Aug. 26, 1686, this lease was surrendered, and a new lease granted to Edward Palmer senior, gent. of the same lands (except as in the former lease is excepted); habend' to Edward Palmer senior, his heirs and assigns, during the lives of his son Thomas Palmer, gent. Edward Palmer junior, son and heir apparent of the said Thomas Palmer, and grandchild of the said Edward Palmer senior, and of Richard Goodal, one of the sons of John Goodal, gent. and the life of the longest liver of them; Edward Palmer junior being nine years, and Richard Goodal seven years of age. Rent as before.

A lease, dated Aug. 28, 1673, made to Elizabeth Wood, of a cottage or tenement in the Borough of Leicester, without the South gate, in tenure of Elizabeth Wood; habend' to the said Elizabeth Wood, her heirs and assigns, for the lives of the said Elizabeth Wood, and of John Wood, brother of the said Elizabeth Wood, and of Sarah Wood, sister of the said Elizabeth Wood. Rent, per annum, 13*s.* 4*d.* at Michaelmas and Lady-day; and a clause of re-entry on non-payment at 20 days. Worth 1*l.* 10*s.* per annum.

A lease, dated Jan. 28, 1675, made to Richard Coleman, of one garden, or orchard, in the parish of St. Martin, in the Borough of Leicester, in tenure of Richard Coleman; habend' to the said Richard Coleman, his executors, administrators, and assigns, from Michaelmas last past, for 21 years. Rent, per annum, 26*s.* at Lady-day and Michaelmas, and 4*s.* more to the poor on Trinity Sunday; with clause of re-entry for non-payment 21 days. Worth, per annum, 2*l.*

A lease, dated Aug. 14, 1676, made to Thomas Payne, barber, of one cottage, or tenement, in the Borough of Leicester, in a certain street called the Cank-street, alias the Cank-well street, over-against the backward part of the White Lion, in tenure of Thomas Payne; habend' to the said Thomas Payne, and his heirs and assigns, for the lives of the said Thomas Payne and Elizabeth his wife, and Thomas Payne the younger, son of the said Thomas Payne the elder. Rent, per annum, 15*s.* at Michaelmas and Lady-day; with clause of re-entry for non-payment at 30 days. Worth, per annum, 1*l.* 10*s.*

A lease, dated April 15, 1682, made to Nicholas Smith, of a little piece of ground, with a barn thereupon built, in the Borough of Leicester, in or near a street called Redcross-street, in tenure of Nicholas Smith; habend' to the said Nicholas Smith, his executors, administrators, and assigns; from 25 March last past, for 21 years. Rent, per annum, 5*s.* at Michaelmas and Lady-day; with clause of re-entry for non-payment of rent at 20 days. Worth, per ann. 15*s.*

The countess of Devon pays to the Hospital two annuities, or yearly rents, amounting to 56*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* These were of the gift of the earl of Huntingdon; and the two chaplains have each of them part thereof, and the poor people have the rest.

Robert Hartshorn is tenant at will of a messuage, with the appurtenances, in the Bishop's Fee, near the Borough of Leicester; rent 19*s.* at Michaelmas and Lady-day. Worth, per annum, 1*l.* 10*s.*

—— Burbage is tenant at will of a house and croft in the said Bishop's Fee; rent 18*s.* payable at Michaelmas and Lady-day. Worth 1*l.* 5*s.* per annum.

A lease, dated Nov. 28, 1684, made to Margaret Palmer, widow, of the manor of Castle Carleton, co. Lincoln, and all the messuages, cottages, lands, tenements, meadow and fen grounds thereto belonging, in Great Carleton, Little Carleton, Castle Carleton, Dalby, and Southkeston (except all timber-trees, other than for necessary reparations); habend' to the said Margaret Palmer, and her heirs and assigns, for the lives of Elizabeth Jackson, Thomas Jackson, gent. and Edward Sawyer; the said Elizabeth Jackson being of the age of 50 years, Thomas Jackson 24 years, and Edward Sawyer 13 years. Rent, per annum, 41*l.* Worth, per annum, 80*l.*

The CHAPEL (see Plate XXXIV. fig. 1.)

of this Hospital was originally a beautiful little Gothic building; the stalls, screen, and loft, of oak, neatly finished. On the outside, the great South window, very noble, is between two rich canopies; fig. 2.

On a tablet, supported by two angels, over the door of entrance, are the Founder's arms, Ermine, on a chevron Sable, three estoiles Or, fig. 3.; inscribed,

"Hoc Ædificium,
à Gulielmo Wigston conditum, extructum erat ad A. D. 1515; refectum & adauctum A. D. 1730, Joh. Jackson Magistro."

The Founder's arms are also on the common seal of the Hospital, fig. 4; and on a smaller seal, which was occasionally used for leases, fig. 5.

The pulpit is at the South end of the chapel, close to the window.

The Communion-table is very plain, covered with a green cloth, but not railed round.

The South window originally contained much fine painted glass; which in 1760 was greatly defaced; but so lately as 1790 several fragments remained; among which were,

The Founder's arms, as in fig. 6.

Semé of trefoils Or, a lion rampant Argent; fig. 7.

In a star quaterfoil, Sable, a fleur de lis Argent, between four cross crosslets; fig. 8.

Argent, a fess nebulé Azure; fig. 9.

A griffin holding a pendant flag; fig. 10.

Two figures praying to the Virgin.

On five separate lights (fig. 11—15.);

majoris . . . . . Stapule . . . . Calisie . . .
Fundatoris et . . . ro . . . . Sua mera charitate.

In the West window, in 1790, were the Four Evangelists, nearly entire; one of them with a book, in which appeared, "In illo tempore cu' . . ua;" fig. 16.

In the same window, well preserved, was the rebus of Wigston, with a merchant's mark; fig. 17, 18.

In the East window were originally the Twelve Apostles, of whom in 1790 were several remains; particularly St. Peter, distinguishable by the cock.

In the same window, on a small glass circle, over an eagle with expanded wings, "Sit laus Deo."

Such was the state of the chapel in 1790. On a review in 1807, I find that the whole has been lately repaired. The East and West windows, I am sorry to say, have been blocked up; and the fine old South window re-placed by a modern one, in which only five small pieces of the painted glass are retained. The small gallery has also been plastered over and white-washed. The whole, however, still looks very neat.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

On the brass selvage of a grave-stone on the floor, round a very neat figure in brass, fig. 19:

"Hic requiescit corpus Domini Will'mi Fyssher primi magistri huj' Hospitalis, quod erectu' fuit per licenciam regiam, et anno gracie 1473, per viru' celeberimu' mercatorem d'm'nu' Will' Wigston, fautorem sacerdotu et pauperu' benefactorem, et quater Stapule Calisie majorem; et p'pter ejus meritum prestet sibi Deus eternum premium. Amen."[1]

On each side of his head, "Respice finem."

Under his figure, "Hoc solu' mihi sup'est sepulcru'."

On a narrow white marble, below the altar:

"Hic jacet Ceci lia, filia'[2] . . . . armig', que obiit anno Domini MCCCCLXXVIII, cujus a'ie misereatur Deus, Amen."

On the West wall:

Arms: Argent, a cross botoné between four escalops Sable, fig. 20. Also: Quarterly, 1. and 4. Argent, three boars' heads Sable, couped Gules, Johnson; 2. and 3. . . . . a lion rampant regardant . . . .; a crescent for difference, fig. 21.

"Præco & confrater post annos sexque decemque Galfridus Johnson relligione pius.
Prole quater geminâ post fata superstite, fatis
Succubuit; strati terra fit ista loco.
Anno 1585.
Sumptibus Brigittæ uxoris, & Roberti fratris ejus."

On the same wall, near the above (now gone[3]):

"Memoriæ & honori Thomæ Sampson, Theologi; Hierarchæ Romanæ, Papaliumque Rituum
Hostis acerrimi;
Sinceritatis Evangelicæ Assertoris constantissimi; hujus Hospitalis per XXI annos Custodis fidelis;
de Republicâ Christianâ optimé meriti;
Patri charissimo hoc Monumentum posuerunt Johannes & Nathaniel Filii."

On the South wall:

Arms: Argent, on a bend Gules, between three pellets, as many swans of the field; on a sinister canton Azure, a demi-ram saliant Argent, debruised with a baton; in chief two fleurs de lis Or, Clarke; impaling, Or, on a cross Azure, five pheons of the field; Harrison, fig. 22.

Clarke single, fig. 23; and Harrison single, fig. 24.

On flat stones:

1. "Here lieth the body of William Rogers,
only son of John Rogers, Archdeacon of Leicester, and Confrater of this Hospital, and Sarah his wife. He departed this life May 3, 1701, in the 11th year of his age."

2. On a small brass plate:

"Here lieth the body of the reverend and learned Mr. John Jackson, Master of this Hospital 34 years.
He died May 12, 1763, aged 77 years."

3. A small flat stone, in memory of "Elizabeth Jackson;" and a mural tablet over it, against the South wall, with the following inscription:

"Underneath lieth interred the body of Elizabeth, the virtuous wife[6] of the Rev. John Jackson, Master of this Hospital. She died Dec. 28, 1760, aged 73 years. Near hereto lie the bodies of four of their children, who died infants."

4. "Sacred to the memory of Mr. John Jackson, son of the rev. Mr. John Jackson, Master of this Hospital;
who departed this life October 4, 1769, aged 52."

[6] They had been married 48 years; and had twelve children, of whom four survived them; John, whose death in 1769 is recorded above. The eldest of three daughters married Mr. John Green, of Leeds, merchant; the second, Mr. Bellam, surgeon, of Leeds; the third, Elizabeth, Mr. Abbot, of Shilton.

MASTERS OF WIGSTON'S HOSPITAL.

1. William Fysher, the first master, is joined with William, Thomas, and Roger Wigston, in the patents for the founding of the Hospital in 1513. He procured from the Grey Friers the grant of St. Francis's garden, paying 4*s.* a year, 21 July, 1521; and Nov. 29, 1539, appeared in the Court of Augmentations, to have the said grant allowed and ratified. It is probable that he died the next year[1]; for,

2. Walter Brown is mentioned as Warden of the Hospital by the commissioners of survey in 1540. He was buried Jan. 10, 1560-1.

3. Nicholas Harwar succeeded, and died in 1567; for

4. Thomas Sampson gave up the accompts, partly for Mr. Harwar, and partly for himself, in 1567 and 1568.—This Mr. Sampson was born about 1517; and, after an academical education at Oxford, became a student of the municipal law in the Temple; but, renouncing the errors of Popery, he entered into holy orders under the patronage of Abp. Cranmer and Bp. Ridley; and in 1551 obtained the rectory of Allhallows, Bread-street, where he was famous as a Preacher. In 1552, he obtained the deanery of Chichester; but in the next year, on the accession of Queen Mary, he was ousted from both his preferments; and, having been charged with collecting money in the Metropolis for the use of such scholars in the Universities as were "haters of the Roman Catholic Religion," he was compelled (with his wife, a niece of Bp. Latimer) to quit the kingdom, and take refuge at Strasburgh, where he became a profound Divine. When Queen Elizabeth ascended the Throne, returning to England, he became a frequent Preacher, both in London and in the Northern counties. In 1560, the Queen designed for him the Bishoprick of Norwich; which he declined, from a dislike to the Hierarchy and Church Ceremonies. At the latter end of that year, he was allowed by the University of Oxford (on his particular supplication) to take the degree of B.D. though he had taken no preceding degree there. In November 1561, being then recently installed Dean of Christ Church, he supplicated that he might be allowed to preach, within the limits of the University, in a Doctoral habit; which, though thought unreasonable, was granted, as he was a Dean, but only to continue till the following Act. After this, he usually preached every other Sunday at St. Mary's; "till (says Wood) being too severe a Calvinist, if not worse, to govern such a noted College as Christ Church, (for he was an enemy to organs, ornaments of the church, clerical vestments, the square cap, he always wearing the round one); he was at length, after a great many admonitions from authority to conform, and entreaties from certain Bishops so to do, removed from his Deanery, by the sentence of Matthew Abp. of Canterbury, in 1564." He obtained the Mastership of Wigston's Hospital in 1567; and the prebend of St. Pancras in St. Paul's cathedral 1570. Continuing his fame as a Preacher, he obtained, by the Queen's licence, the office of Theological Lecturer in Whittington college, London; but, before he had enjoyed that situation quite six years, he was afflicted with the palsy; after which he retired to Leicester, where he passed the remainder of his days in preaching and writing; and died April 9, 1589, æt. 72. He was buried in the chapel of his Hospital[1]; with an inscription to his memory by his sons John and Nathaniel Sampson[2]. His publications were, "Letter to the Professors of Christ's Gospel in the Parish of Allhallows in Bread-street, London;" printed at Strasburgh, 1550, 8vo; "A Warning to take heed of Fowler's Psalter, 1578," 8vo; "Brief Collections of the Church, and Ceremonies thereof, 1581," 8vo. In that year also he published "Two Sermons, the first of Repentance, the other of the Lord's Supper," written by his Friend John Bradford, with other things of that Author. After his death also appeared his "Prayers and Meditations Apostolique, gathered and framed out of the Epistles of the Apostles, &c. 1592," 16°[3].

5. Nathaniel Sampson, son of the last master, was appointed confrater in 1585; and in 1589 succeeded his father as master of this Hospital. He died in 1611, and was buried Sept. 21.

6. John Herault, esq. who appears to have been a native of France, was the next master. Mr. Carte mentions a letter from ". . . . . de Saint Sauveur," dated London, July 20, 1612, to Mr. Thomas Sacheverell, confrater of the Hospital of William Wigston in Leicester. By another, not directed nor dated, but subscribed "de Saint Sauveur," it seems that he had a contest with his predecessor's executors. In it he says, "The chiefest ground of the adverse parties is, that when Thomas Sampson came to be master, he found all the Hospital land forfeited to the Queen, which is a most abominable lie; and the letters patent which he obtained were rather for his own benefit, than for the profit of the house; for his predecessors did afore him, both in king Edward and also in queen Mary's time, obtain letters for confirmation of the Founder's gift, and therefore needeth no other formality; but, forasmuch as he saw that he was accountable for the fines unto the house, he therefore charged that article to his own proper use."

Mr. Herault was succeeded, in 1620, by

7. Samuel Clarke, D. D. second son of Edward Clarke, or Clerke, of Willoughby in Warwickshire (a manor antiently belonging to the Hospital of St. John in Oxford; and afterward to Magdalen college in that University, under whom the Clerkes have for three centuries been tenants.) Of this family several were of no small eminence. Henry, elder brother to our Master, was a serjeant at law; and they were related to the Clerkes of Wolston, the residence of the Wigstons[4].

Samuel Clarke was of Magdalen college, Oxford; where he took the degree of D. D. as a grand compounder June 13, 1616, being at that time chaplain to Prince Charles[5]. He obtained the rectory of St. Peter's, Northampton, with the chapelries of Kingsthorpe and Upton annexed, 1608; and the rectory of Winwick in that county 1614.—He wrote a letter to the confrater, Nov. 8, 1633, about a suit against sir Thomas Beaumont. In another letter, he acquaints him that he was admitted one of the chaplains of the Prince. But he was a very bad man; for (on his conduct being called to an account), in 1640, it was made to appear that he had 10*l.* for placing Jeremy Fynnys in the Hospital (besides what he received for his clothes and goodes at his death); that he had also 10*l.* for admitting George Chester; and that his wife had 10*l.* for placing Dorothy Everard there; and that Mr. Robinson paid him 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for his mother's admittance, &c. Mr. Carte quotes the following papers in proof of the above assertion:

A note of the fines and bribes taken by Dr. Clarke. The particulars were proved before the referees at Leicester, Jan. 15, 1640.

The fines mentioned between 1620 and 1638 amount in all to 1681*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; besides above 1000*l.* received of the rents of the South Field tithes in Leicester, of which he never allowed any thing to the poor, or made any account; and 40*l.* in wood sold at Castle Carleton.

Of Divines; 2. Of Nobility, &c. 1683," folio; before which is a canting narrative of his own life. He died at Isleworth, Dec. 25, 1682.—Wood, Athen. Oxon; Fasti, vol. I. p. 202.

By letter, dated Kingsthorpe, June 24, Dr. Clarke owns the taking some of the Hospital goods away; but promises to allow for them in his accounts.

8. William Chillingworth, clerk, M. A. was his successor; whose patent was dated 10 March, 16 Car. I. empowering him to receive the like profits, &c. as Nathaniel Sampson, Thomas Sampson, John Herault, or Samuel Clarke, or any other master of Wigston's Hospital, did or might receive. The history of this bright ornament of Christianity is too well known to need being even mentioned here, were it not to relate a circumstance his biographers have overlooked. He became chancellor of Salisbury and master of Wigston's Hospital about 1638; "both which," says Wood, "and perhaps other preferments, he kept to his dying day." It appears, however, that he was sequestered from the mastership of Wigston's Hospital 8 Jan. 1643-4, on being taken with the forces in arms against the Parliament at Arundel castle; an event which he did not survive many days, as he died on or about the 30th of the same month, in his 42d year, at the Episcopal Palace at Chichester. The Presbyterian party were unwilling at first to allow him Christian burial[1]; but afterwards consented that he should be buried by those of his own persuasion; which was accordingly performed in the Cathedral church, most of the Royal party in that city attending his body to the grave; and on a neat mural monument on the South side of the cloisters of that Cathedral is the following epitaph:

9. John Meredith, who had been created D. D. Nov. 1, 1642, and was at that time fellow of Eton College, had been presented to the rectory of Stanford Rivers, Essex, in 1641; but was deprived of that valuable living, by an ordinance of Parliament, May 6, 1643. He was chaplain to the earl of Newburgh, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who by patent, under the Duchy seal, dated Feb. 3, 1643-4, gave him this mastership. But the Parliament would not permit him to enjoy it; for, after the sequestration of Chillingworth, they directed this mastership to be disposed of to the benefit and advantage of Mr. Job Grey, minister, brother to the earl of Kent; and on the 6th of March, 1643-4, finding by their Journals that the Chancellor of the Duchy had not complied with their order, he was peremptorily commanded so to do. On the 11th of April, the following entry occurs:

"Whereas John Meredith, doctor in divinity, was, for divers misdemeanours, &c. sequestered from the Church of Stamford Rivers in Essex, by judgment of the House of Peers, May 6, 1643; notwithstanding, since he is preferred to be governor of the Hospital of Leicester: It is ordered, that he be forthwith sequestered from being governor of the said Hospital; and that Job Grey, clerk, shall supply the government of the said Hospital; and shall have for his pains all houses, lodgings, rents, revenues, and benefits whatsoever belonging thereunto, until further order be taken by this House[2]."

This passed on, however, without any farther notice, till the year 1646, when 10. Job Grey was intruded by the Parliament; his patent bearing date that year, April 16. He had been a prisoner to the Royalists in 1645; and was exchanged, by order of Parliament, June 13, for sir William Riddall, knight. He continued master till the beginning of 1650.

11. Richard Lee was in possession in 1650 and 1651; for which he accounted in a letter of his, dated at Hatfield, July 19, 1661, directed to Mr. Stanley and Mr. Cradock, wherein he speaks of "several evidences, which he delivered in the Hospital chapel to them and their fellow trustees; and prays them to consult the two attorneys their brethren in that forced trust, that the evidences may be delivered to Dr. Meredith, the master of the Hospital, to whom (says he) I had the honour to resign the place upon noble terms," &c.

At the Restoration, Dr. Meredith was restored to his fellowship and to this Hospital; elected warden of All Souls; and made provost of Eton. He was a person of a very generous spirit, and very bountiful to the poor, to whom he left a yearly stipend at his death, which happened July 18, 1665. By his last will, dated Jan. 24, 1664, and proved November 21, 1665, he forgave what sums of money should be due to him at his death upon account of Wigston's Hospital. This benefaction is noticed in the following epitaph, on a black marble, against the wall of the chapel in All Souls College[3]:

12. Richard Clarke, M. A. had his patent Aug. 4, 1665. He was a very good man, and kind master of the Hospital. He died Oct. 19, 1684, at Leicester, and was buried Oct. 24. See his epitaph, p. 495.

Mr. Carte notices several letters from Mr. Richard Clarke to Mr. Edward Palmer: by which it appears that he lived at Isleworth in Middlesex.

1717-18. "In his time, one of the poor men of Wigston's Hospital made a will, and therein bequeathed a Note (given to him for money and interest,) signed by Thomas Noble the elder, esq. to Rebecca Warner, paying something out of it, the residue to her own use; and made her executrix. He dies; Mr. Hardwick, the Master of the Hospital, entered a cavat against any proof of the will. This was contested, upon this footing; that one of the orders among the new Statutes of the Hospital provides, that, when any of the poor men or women die, they shall not make any will concerning their moveable goods, but shall leave what they die possessed of in money or goods to the use of the said Hospital; which the Keeper (i. e. Nurse) shall take and deliver over to the Master, who is empowered to reward the said Keeper for nursing and attending the deceased in his illness, and put the remainder to the accompt of the Hospital. It was objected, first, in bar to the demand of the Master of the Hospital, that this Note could not be comprised within the meaning of this ordinance. Secondly, that the Note being subject to the Ordinary's authority, it could not as such be left to the Hospital; and if so, it must be put in suit by the executor or administrator cum testamento annexo. [Mr. George Newel, a Lambeth LL. B. Chancellor of Lincoln, and Official of Leicester, granted administration of the Note to Mr. Simon Barwell, Steward of the said Hospital.] A third objection was, that by another ordinance of the Hospital, if any of the poor should acquire the value of 20*l.* he should be displaced; therefore, this being 20*l.* and more, the Hospital had no more right to it now the man was dead, than when he was alive. Upon hearing the cause, Mr. Nowel gave sentence in favour of the Hospital.—This sentence seems a discouragement to the above ordinance, displacing a poor man; because the more such a one dies possessed of, the better for the Hospital; who therefore may connive at the increase of his goods, that the corporate emolument may be the more advantageous[1]."

15. Samuel Clarke, D. D. rector of St. James's, Westminster, succeeded March 7, 1717-18. The life of this truly amiable man, like that of his predecessor Chillingworth, is so universally known, that I need not detail it here. But a concise character of him, by the late Rev. Dr. Salter, is worth transcribing:

"SAMUEL CLARKE, D. D.

Rector of St. James', Westminster: in each several part of useful knowledge and critical learning, perhaps without a superior; in all united, certainly without an equal: in his Works, the best defender of Religion; in his practice, the greatest ornament to it: in his conversation, communicative; and in an uncommon manner instructive: in his preaching and writings, strong, clear, and calm: in his life, high in the esteem of the wise, the good, and the great: in his death, lamented by every friend to learning, truth, and virtue. He died in the fifty-fourth year of his age, May 17, MDCCXXIX."

16. John Jackson, the confrater, succeeded him. He was the eldest son of the rev. John Jackson (firs rector of Sensey near Thirsk, and afterwards rector of Rossington, and vicar of Doncaster in Yorkshire: born at Sensey in that county April 4, 1686; and educated at Doncaster school, under the famous Dr. Bland (afterwards dean of Durham, and provost of Eton;) who, observing his proficiency, often left the instruction of the younger scholars to his care. Thus accomplished, he was entered of Jesus College[2], Cambridge, towards the end of 1702; and from his residence at Midsummer following prosecuted the academical studies with diligence, and learned Hebrew under the celebrated Orientalist Simon Ockley. He proceeded B. A. at the usual period; and, leaving the University in 1707, was appointed tutor to the children of Mr. Simpson, at Renshaw in Derbyshire. In the mean time, the rectory of Rossington having been reserved from the death of his father for him, by the Corporation of Doncaster[3], he took deacon's orders in 1708; and in 1710 was ordained priest, and entered into the full possession of that rectory. But, the parsonage-house being gone to decay, he boarded at Doncaster; and in 1712, married Elizabeth daughter of John Cowley, esq. collector of Excise there. On this marriage, he entirely rebuilt the parsonage-house at Rossington, and went to reside in it. He commenced author in 1714, by publishing three anonymous letters in defence of Dr. Samuel Clarke's "Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity." He was not at that time personally acquainted with Dr. Clarke; but met with him soon after at Lynn Regis in Norfolk. Mr. Tonson the bookseller intending, in 1726, to publish a Bible, with paraphrase and notes by several hands, applied to him, by Dr. Clarke, to undertake the comment upon the Prophets, proposing a handsome gratuity; but he declined the offer, and the same year engaged in the cause of his friend against Dr. Waterland[4]. In the same year also there passed several letters between him and Mr. Whiston, on the subject of Infant Baptism. In 1718, he went to Cambridge to take his degree of M. A.; but, finding such an opposition raised against it as he was unable to remove, he desisted from the pursuit[5]. Presently after his return, he received a consolatory letter from Dr. Clarke, who also procured for him this Confratership[6], to which he was presented in 1719 by lord Lechmere, in whose gift it was as then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and to whom Dr. Clarke had been the year before indebted for the Mastership. On this promotion Mr. Jackson left Rossington; and removing to Leicester, took out a licence, May 30, 1722, from his diocesan, Dr. Gibson bishop of Lincoln, to qualify him, as confrater, to be the afternoon preacher or lecturer of St. Martin's church; but he constantly visited his flock at Rossington for two or three months every year during his life. In 1721, and the following year, several presentments were lodged against him in the Bishop's Court, as also in that of Dr. Trimnel archdeacon of Leicester, for preaching erroneous doctrines[7]; but he so strenuously vindicated himself, as to defeat the prosecutions[8]. Yet, after the case

[2] This, I suppose, led the executors to give, unasked, his large collection of New Testaments to that College, which they had before estimated to be worth 100*l.*

[3] The Corporation might do ill or well on this occasion, in reserving their living for a minor, as it should happen; however, against his death, they sold the next turn for 800*l.* and with the money paved the long street of their town, that forms part of the great North road.

[4] Nine treatises by Mr. Jackson on this controversy, from 1716 to 1738, are enumerated in the Supplementary Volume [vol. VI. part 2.] of the Biographia Britannica, 1766, p. 107.

[5] Dr. Clarke, in a letter to him on the occasion, writes thus: "It is of great service to the Jacobite cause, to discourage such persons as you are. I shall particularly thank the then Chancellor and Dean Sherlock for being of a better spirit."

[6] This office is held (for life) by patent from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and was particularly acceptable to Mr. Jackson, as it requies no subscription to any Article of Religion. His predecessor Chillingworth had (for a time) refused to subscribe. Neal, in the History of the Puritans, vol. III. chap. ii. p. 101, 8vo, says, "Chillingworth was persuaded to subscribe for the two preferments he before mentioned [viz. the chancellorship of Sarum, and the mastership of Wigston's Hospital.] Both these are held by patent, and require no subscription." But Chillingworth was not chancellor of the diocese, but of the church of Sarum; which stall undoubtedly requires subscription, as much as any simple prebendal stall in a cathedral.

[7] Complaint was made to Bishop Gibson that Mr. Jackson did not read the Athanasian Creed in the Chapel of the Hospital; to which Mr. Jackson replied, "that the Chapel was not in the Bishop's jurisdiction; and that the Statutes of this House directed the Apostles' Creed to be read, and no other."

[8] The following notes respecting Mr. Jackson's Sermons are from Mr. Carte's hand-writing: "Oct. 30, 1720, Mr. Jackson, in his Sermon [upon Matth. xv. 6. as I was informed,] did, in express terms, assert, that giving worship [to an object] where God had not commanded it, was the only true and proper notion of idolatry. He also instanced in several traditions among the Jews, which he asserted to be within the intent of the censure of traditions contained in the text; and then specified several traditions in the Church of Rome, as parrllel or agreeable to what he had quoted from the Jews; and, amongst the rest, he particularly mentioned the imposition of rites, ceremonies, &c. and forcing articles of doctrines upon men's consciences; and after

of the Arian subscription was published by Dr. Waterland, he resolved, with Dr. Clarke, never to subscribe the Articles any more; by which resolution he lost, about 1724, the hopes of a prebend of Salisbury, which bishop Hoadly refused to give him without such subscription[1]. The Bishop's denial was more remarkable, as he had so often intimated his own dislike of all subscriptions. However, he had been presented by Sir John Fryer to the private prebend of Wherwell in Hampshire, where no such qualification was requisite. In 1723, Mr. Jackson published "The Duty of Subjects towards their Governors; a Sermon preached before the Hon. Charles Churchill's Regiment of Dragoons, at their Camp near Leicester, August 1723;" and in 1728, "The Duty of a Christian set forth and explained in several Practical Discourses, being an Exposition of the Lord's Prayer; to which is added, a Discourse on the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, for the Use of Families." On the death of Dr. Clarke, in May 1729, Mr. Jackson succeeded by the presentation of the duke of Rutland then chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, to the mastership of this Hospital; which office he held till his death. He repaired and made several additions to the master's house; repaired the Hospital, and by degrees augmented the stipend of the poor to 3s. a week.

In 1730, an extraordinary dispute arose between Mr. Jackson and Mr. Carte, respecting the Trinity, which was conducted with an acrimony that disgraces the professors of religion. Mr. Carte was a rigid Trinitarian, and Mr. Jackson publicly professed the Unitarian system. In the establishment of Wigston's Hospital, the confrater is enjoined to preach a sermon at St. Martin's church every Sunday in the year, and also every Wednesday and Friday (or two other days every week,) at such times as the master of the Hospital shall appoint, unless the church shall be occupied by any other preacher, or he be letted by sickness[2]. Mr. Carte, with a manliness and zeal that became his function, held out to the people a picture of a dying Saviour, and a God in a Ghostly Comforter. Mr. Jackson, with as much zeal, and great classical knowledge, but with less temperance, and in defiance of that Establishment which he had engaged to defend at his ordination, boldly asserted the doctrine of One only God. For a time the church was crowded to hear these zealous disputants: they each had their partizans. One Sunday the Churchwardens, in the midst of Mr. Jackson's discourse, bad him leave the pulpit. Another Sunday the sexton was placed to prevent his going into the pulpit; till at length, the people growing weary of the dispute, the seats in the church were left almost without hearers. The bickerings ended with an appeal to the Duchy Court, respecting the claims of the one, and the privileges of the other; and, like most disputes of this kind, each party found themselves involved in considerable expences, and neither of them was much a gainer[3].

In the same year, 1730, Mr. Jackson published "A Defence of Human Liberty, in Answer to the principal Arguments which have been alleged against it, and particularly to Cato's Letters on that Subject, &c. The second Edition; to which is added, A Vindication of Human Liberty, in answer to a Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity, written by Anthony Collins, Esq." 8vo. And in that and the following year he published four tracts in defence of human reason, occasioned by bishop Gibson's "Second Pastoral Letter."

after an harangue against these practices, declared this practice much worse when used by men who owned themselves fallible, and assumed not the vain pretence of infallibility: spoke against authority in matters of faith, as within the condemnation or censure in the text."—"Nov. 6, the Confrater preached at All Saints church, in the morning. His discourse was on the Attribute of Mercy; and, on discoursing on those objects of it, Penitent Sinners, the substance of his doctrine was, that proportionable repentance alone was sufficient to entitle them to it, without any satisfaction of a Redeemer: neither was it necessary at all, from the Attribute of Justice, that any expiatory sacrifice should be offered. I cannot charge my memory with particular words and phrases whereby he expressed himself, but this was the purport of his doctrine. He said some things, which I presume to be very heterodox, concerning the eternity of Hell torments."—"Jan. 15, 1720-21, Mr. Jackson, in his Sermon [upon Jeremiah xxiii. 24. Do not I fill Heaven and Earth,] described God as pervading all material substances and others, and therefore incapable of local motion, and without figure. He asserted, that he pervaded the extramundane places; and, in my apprehensions, confounded his essence or nature with that of space; or at least I do not remember that he attempted to distinguish them. He afterwards said, that the appearances of God, as mentioned in the Old Testament, were only the appearances of an Angel, who came from him, and spoke in his name—which Angel he afterwards expressly asserted to be our Saviour; and taking occasion, from the text, to speak of the practice of the Papists in worshiping Saints and Angels, he said, that, in so doing, they not only gave religious worship where God had not commanded, but even where he had forbade it; in which he asserted the true notion of idolatry to consist. He took notice that Saints and Angels were confined to certain places, and could not hear prayers that were made to them; which he described could be done only by God, and such to whom he should reveal it."—"February 5, 1720-21, Mr. Jackson, preaching on Micah vi. 6, 7, 8, made it his business to magnify morality in an extraordinary manner, and depreciate all rites and ordinances, even those instituted by God himself, both in time of the Law and of the Gospel; the frequenting of the Public Worship, the two Sacraments, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, &c. And though it cannot, I think, be denied but that each of his sentences might be explained in a sense agreeable to truth, yet the general tenor of his discourse tended to lessen people's regard to the Public Worship and the Sacraments of the Gospel, and to make them rely on their moral virtues for salvation."—"March 26, 1721, at the Assize preaching on Genesis xviii. 25, Shall not the Judge of all the world do right, he asserted that it was unlawful for the magistrate or legislative power to make any law in matters of religion to suppress any opinion, though never so absurd; and, excepting the Papists from any toleration, said that Popery totally destroyed Christianity."

[2] By the Earl of Huntingdon's injunction (see p. 485,) the confrater was only to preach at such times as the pulpit should be vacant; he having no power to thrust out the vicar. But on the 1st of November, 1730, Mr. Jackson being then master of the Hospital, and intending to officiate in the place and at the desire of Mr. Hacket the confrater, Mr. Carte (then vicar,) without sending Mr. Jackson notice, set the sacristan at the bottom of the pulpit-stairs to refuse him admittance to the pulpit, alleging he would preach himself; which he did, having first of all thus publicly affronted Mr. Jackson. Mr Hacket, then confrater, admonished as such on that occasion, by a thrice repeated citation directed by the churchwardens, when Jackson was stopped at the pulpit-stairs, "Mr. Philip Hacket, come and do your office." Mr. Jackson immediately removed the sermon from Sunday to Friday, alleging he had a power to do so by the Earl of Huntingdon's deed. Some of the parishioners on this filed a bill (which is always in the nature of a petition) against him in the Duchy Court. This appears by the following entry in the accompt-books of the churchwardens of St. Martin's: "July 1, 1730. It is agreed at this meeting, that if the present churchwardens, or their successors, shall be put to any expence on the account of the suit that has been some time depending between Mr. John Jackson, master of Wigston's Hospital, and them, the same expence shall be allowed them in their accompts with the parish."—The Chancellor, Oct. 23, 1731, decreed the sermon should be on Sunday, according to the former usage; but dismissed the other complaints in the bill. "In a meeting of the parish of St. Martin's, Leicester, Mr. Mayor being present, this 2d of November, 1731, it is resolved, that the thanks of this parish be given to the Right Honourable the Earl of Huntingdon, for his generous protection of the said parish, by espousing their cause, in the matter of their complaint to the Chancellor of the Duchy, against the master and confrater of Wigston's Hospital, who were craftily endeavouring to defeat and pervert the designs of his noble Ancestors benefactions; and for his pious and honourable interposition, by his counsel, at the hearing of the said cause, to make it effectual for the Christian purposes as it was intended, to promote the glory of God, the edification of the county in general, and the instruction of this parish in particular, in the true doctrine of Christianity, and principles of the Church of England. And it is further ordered, that the churchwardens do appoint others, or go down with the same. Edward Hawkins, Gabriel Newton, Samuel Brown, Churchwardens."—The substance of the account was taken by the late Rev. William Ludlam from a copy of the bill (or petition) filed against Jackson; Jackson's answer, and the duke of Rutland's determination. The original papers relative to these proceedings, with the statutes of the Hospital, the act of parliament confirming the same, the earl of Huntingdon's deed of gift, and the deed declaring the uses, are now in the Evidence-room of the Hospital, with innumerable leases (for lives) of lands belonging to the same, terriers, &c.

[3] Mr. Jackson lived to see some of those who signed the petition, and were most violent against him, so reduced, as to be glad of a place among the poor in Wigston's Hospital; which with a true Christian temper he bestowed upon them without hesitating, or reproaching them for their former behaviour.

In 1731, he attacked Tindal's "Christianity as old as the Creation;" in 1733, he published an answer to "Things divine and supernatural, conceived by Analogy with Things natural and human," a work attributed to bishop Brown, of Cork; in 1734, "The Existence and Unity of God proved from his Nature and attributes, &c. To which is added an Appendix, wherein is considered the Ground and Obligations of Morality," which led him into a controversy with Mr. William Law and other writers; in 1735, "A Dissertation on Matter and Spirit, with some Remarks on a Book, intituled, An Enquiry into the Nature of the human Soul," [by Mr. Baxter;] and in 1736, "A Narrative of the Case of the Rev. Mr. Jackson's being refused the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at Bath;" which had been done, in a very public manner, by Dr. Coney[1]. In 1742, he had an epistolary debate with his friend William Whiston, concerning the order and times of the high priests. In 1744, he published "An Address to the Deists[2]; being a Proof of Revealed Religion from Miracles and Prophesies, in answer to a Book, intituled, The Resurrection of Jesus considered by a Moral Philosopher," 8vo; and in 1745 entered the lists against Mr. Warburton, in "The Belief of a future State proved to be a fundamental Article of the Religion of the Hebrews, and held by the Philosophers; the Heathen Theology explained, and the Time of Job; with Remarks on Mr. Lardner's fifth Volume, &c. 1745," 8vo. On this production, Mr. Warburton not unpleasantly remarked, "that all its objections, even to the very blunders, had been long ago obviated or answered. But I would recommend," he says, "Mr. Jackson's pamphlet to the reader's perusal, as a specimen of that illustrious Band in which he has thought fit to enlist; and which indeed would have been imperfect without this Answerer General; and, after having written against the Enquiry into the Nature of the Human Soul, does me too much honour to be overlooked." Mr. Jackson either published a second part of his "Belief of a future State," or added an Appendix to his former part, "occasioned by some severe reflections on the author and his writings, contained in the second part of Mr. Warburton's Remarks," which appeared in 1746. Mr. Warburton, in March 1747, replied, in a Preface to Mr. Towne's "Critical Enquiry into the Opinions and Practice of the ancient Philosophers, &c." Mr. Jackson immediately pursued the subject in "A further Defence of the antient Philosophers, against the Misrepresentations of a Critical Enquiry, prefaced by Mr. Warburton, 1747;" and by "A Treatise on the Improvement made in the Art of Criticism, collected out of the Writings of a celebrated Hypercritic; by Philocriticus Cantabrigiensis, 1748." Mr. Warburton having made some remarks on this treatise, the controversy closed by "A Defence of a late Pamphlet, called A Treatise on the Improvement made in the Art of Criticism, being an answer to some remarks made upon it, 1749."

Soon after the controversy between Mr. Jackson and Mr. Warburton, who knew not each other's person, chance brought them together in the little parlour behind Mr. Whiston the bookseller's shop. They looked stedfastly at each other. Mr. Jackson, passing through the shop, asked whom it was he had just met. Being told that it was Warburton, he answered, "I thought it was some such fellow!" Warburton, in like manner, asked who Jackson was; and replied, "I thought it was some such blockhead!" This anecdote was communicated by the Rev. Dr. Owen.

Mr. Jackson's next work was, "Remarks on Dr. Middleton's free Enquiry into the miraculous Power supposed to have subsisted in the Christian Church after the Days of the Apostles." From this time he does not appear to have published any thing till his last and capital work, "Chronological Antiquities; or, the Antiquities and Chronology of the most antient Kingdoms, from the Creation of the World, for the space of 5000 Years, &c. To which are added proper indexes[3], 1752," 3 vols. 4to. He afterwards made many collections and preparations for printing an edition of the New Testament in Greek, with Scholia in the same language; and would have inserted all the various readings, had not the infirmities of age, which he felt some years before his death, prevented him from finishing the design[4]. His bodily strength declining, and the faculties of his mind gradually decreasing (of which he seemed but too sensible,) he became incapable of close application to study[5]; but retained his thirst after knowledge till his death, which happened at Leicester, on Ascension-day, May 12, 1763. By his wife, who died three years before him[6], he had twelve children; of whom one son and three daughters were living in 1764.—The following hints of Mr. Jackson's character were given me by the late Rev. William Ludlam, who was acquainted with him from the year 1750: "He always seemed to me rather a man of industry than genius; at least such genius as is necessary to reconcile the inconsistent accounts of antient writers, and make out a clear system of antient Chronology. He certainly took all that he has said about hieroglyphics and mysteries from Warburton; but so totally forgot or overlooked it (as was his custom on other occasions,) that he verily thought it all his own; nor did he understand any of the Eastern languages, except a little Hebrew. He was much offended at Dr. Coney (and would have been at any one) for saying that he denied the Divinity of the Son. But then he would not on any account give the Son the appellation of self-existent necessarily-existent, &c. or any of those metaphysical titles. His being so early a defender of Dr. Clarke, and his political zeal for the Hanover family, got him his preferment; and his earliest writings, especially his 'Plea for Human Reason,' appear to have been his best."

18. Folliott-Herbert-Walker Cornewall, fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge; B. A. 1777; M. A. and Chaplain to the House of Commons[7], 1780; and Canon of Windsor April 10, 1784. He was presented to this Hospital[8] Aug. 2, 1790; and resigned it in 1793, on being promoted to the deanery of Canterbury. He was made Bishop of Bristol March 18, 1797; and translated to Hereford in 1802.

19. John Selwyn, of Pembroke college, Oxford, B. C. L. 1780; rector of Ludgershall, Wilts; was presented to this Hospital in January 1793; and is the present Master, 1807.

[1] The particulars were given at the time in Gent. Mag. vol. V. p. 617.

[2] In 1758, Mr. Jackson absurdly complained, in a letter to Dr. Birch, that out of 500 copies which Mr. Knapton had printed of his "Address to the Deists," 150 were unsold through Mr. Knapton's negligence.

[3] In a quarter of a sheet of "Additions" to this work, is an answer to a note printed at the end of a new edition of the first volume of "The Divine Legation."

[4] An account of the materials he had collected for this intended edition, with notes containing alterations, corrections, and additions to his Chronology, are inserted in an Appendix to "Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the late Rev. Mr. John Jackson, &c. London, 1764, by Dr. Sutton, of Leicester," 8vo.; whence, and from the Anecdotes of Bowyer, this account is principally extracted. There are many particulars also relating to him in Whiston's Life of Clarke.

[5] He had published thirty-six separate books and pamphlets. And in "The Old Whig," No. 33 and No. 39 were his productions. He was editor also of "Novatiani Presbyteri Opera quæ extant omnia, post Jacobi Pamelii Brugensis recensionem, ad antiquiores editiones castigata, & à multis mendis expurgata, 1728," 4to.

[6] See their epitaphs in p. 495.

[7] He published, in 1782, a Sermon preached before the House of Commons on the 30th of January, from Psalm cx. 15; and in 1798 (as Bishop of Bristol,) a Fast Sermon before the House of Lords.

[8] Mr. Cornewall's usual residence was then at Delbury, near Ludlow, Shropshire.

CONFRATERS.

1. John Thorpe, named in the founder's statutes. In the return of the Commissioners, 31 Hen. VIII. we find a Thomas Thorpe. They might be different persons.

2. Peter Wood.

3. Geoffrey Johnson was confrater at the making the new statutes in 1572. He was buried Sept. 25, 1585. See his epitaph, p. 495.—“The first lecturer which we have met with in the Town of Leicester, was this Mr. Johnson. March 13, 1584, a common hall agreed, that the twenty-four and forty-eight should give some yearly portion or salary to the said Mr. Johnson the preacher, towards his better maintenance, together with other inhabitants of the town. N. B. That Henry Earl of Huntingdon settled 30*l.* a year on the confrater of Wigston's Hospital, to preach in St. Martin's church on Sunday, Wednesday, and Friday, or two other week-days. But before this, Nov. 22, 1567, it was agreed, that the lecture on Wednesday and Friday should begin at seven o'clock in the forenoon, and end at eight. But the lecture was began still before this; for, Feb. 20, 1561-2, it was ordered, that there be of every house one at every sermon on Wednesday and Friday[1], on pain that every house-holder making default forfeit 4*d.* Which order was renewed Nov. 18, 1575, and the penalty made 12*d.*; and Nov. 21, 1578, ordered that no person resort to any inn on Wednesday, Friday, and in time of sermon or divine service, on pain of 12*d.* May 8, 1588, agreed that the twenty-four pay each 10*s.* yearly towards the preacher's stipend, and the forty-eight 5*s.* besides the benevolence that each will give more, and also the commonalty. Oct. 21, 1596, ordered, that one of every household come to the sermons weekly, on pain of 6d. for every default. The order was renewed Nov. 18, 1598, and the penalty made 4*d.*; and Oct. 7, 1600, the foregoing orders were enforced[2].”

4. Nathaniel Sampson was appointed confrater in 1585; and was advanced to be master in 1589.

5. Thomas Sacheverell succeeded in 1589; and on the 31st of August it was agreed, that Mr. Sacheverell should that year have 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* paid by the chamberlains, who were to receive of the twenty-four 5*s.* each, and of the forty-eight 2*s.* 6*d.* and tax the commoners. But Sir Francis Walsingham, who had made him confrater, in a letter dated at London, March 10, 1589-90, directed to the mayor and his brethren, and the rest of the town, complained of their not giving due encouragement to Mr. Sacheverell, whereas they had allowed to Mr. Pelsant, their former preacher, above 40*l.* per annum, besides what other maintenance he had elsewhere; and Sir Edward Hastings also being of opinion that what they had as yet done for him was not sufficient, it was agreed, that Mr. Sacheverell's stipend should be settled at 20*l.*; and afterwards, April 14, at the request of the earl of Huntingdon, made 30*l.*; which was confirmed to him, by Town-seal, as long as he should continue Preacher of Leicester. In 1590, he married Mary daughter of Alderman Robert Heyrick; and continued in the joint office of Confrater and Lecturer, with much credit, till his death. He was buried at St. Martin's, Dec. 1, 1626; and the following epitaph for him is preserved in Bancroft's Poems:

“Who dare prophane thee, noble, rare Divine,
Thou mighty workman in the sacred mine!
Behold this hand thus deep engraves thy praise,
Whose mind thou didst with emulation raise.
One line shall thy reproachers all confute,
Those beasts dislik'd that could not reach thy fruit!”

See several letters of Mr. Sacheverell[3], which shew him to have been a man of sound sense and great public spirit, in vol. I. pp. 341—345; and vol. II. p. 628.

6. John Angel, a native of Gloucestershire, was entered at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, about 1610. Taking orders, and his degrees in Arts, “he became a frequent and painful Preacher[4];” was appointed Confrater in 1626; and continued several years Lecturer at St. Martin's, in high esteem amongst the Puritans, till 1634; when “the Dean of the Arches suspended one Mr. Angel at Leicester; ho hath continued a Lecturer in that great town for these divers years, without any licence at all to preach, yet took liberty enough. I doubt this violence hath crackt his brains; and do therefore use him the more tenderly, because I see the hand of God hath overtaken him[5].”

Mr. Angel married Alice daughter of Francis Oliver. She died April 17, 1631; and was buried at St. Martin's, Leicester[6]. Bancroft thus celebrates her, by way of epitaph, in his Poems:

“Angel in name, and Angel like in life,
Save that she was a mortal, and a wife:
These bonds discharg'd, advanc'd this perfect wife
To Angel's single and immortal life!”

May 21, 1641, it was agreed, that Mr. John Angel, the Town lecturer, should have 10*l.* per annum, given out of the Town stock, so long as the two Companies think fit, for his pains-taking in the Wednesday-lecture, to be paid at Midsummer and Christmas.

June 13, 1645, it was agreed, by the lords and commons in parliament, that John Angel, minister, confrater of Wigston's Hospital, and then a prisoner at Leicester, should be exchanged for Davies Ambrose, D.D.; and Mr. Job Grey for sir William Riddall, knt.[7]

June 17, 1646, the following provision was made for Mr. Angel in particular, and for the other Ministers of Leicester[8]: “Whereas there are five parish churches in the town of Leicester, in the county of Leicester, and the maintenance to them all belonging is worth but 83*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* or thereabouts; for that divers of the said churches may be conveniently united, and a competent maintenance thereby the better advanced for the encouragement of an able ministry in the said town: It is therefore ordered, that the members of parliament that serve for the said county be desired to consider how the said churches may with the best convenience be united, and to certify the same to this Committee: And whereas Mr. Angel, a godly, learned, and orthodox Divine, of whose deserts this Committee have received large testimony, is Lecturer there: It is ordered, by virtue of an order of both houses of parliament, of the 2d of May last, that the yearly sum of 80*l.* be paid, out of the profits of the impropriate rectory of Melton in the said county, sequestered from Henry Hudson, esq. delinquent; and out of the impropriate rectory of Great Easton, in the said county, sequestered from sir Lewis Watson, delinquent; and out of the profits of the impropriate rectory of Garthorpe, in the said county, sequestered from sir Lewis Watson; to and for increase of the maintenance of the said Mr. Angell, for and during the continuance of his said service and ministry in the said town: And that the yearly sum of 50*l.* be paid out of the profits of the premises for the increase of the maintenance of such person and persons as shall succeed the said Mr. Angell in the said service: And that the further sum of 100*l.* be paid and allowed, out of the said profits, to and for increase of the maintenance of such other Ministers as shall be appointed to officiate in the said town, the said churches being united as aforesaid."

[8] Mr. —— Higginson, who had been educated at Emanuel College, Cambridge, proceeding M. A. was afterwards parson of one of the five churches in Leicester, where he continued for some years, till he was deprived for nonconformity; but such were his talents for the pulpit, that, after his suspension, the Town obtained liberty from Bishop Williams to choose him for their Lecturer, and maintained him by their voluntary contributions, till Laud being at the head of church affairs, he was articled against in the High Commission, and expected every hour a sentence of perpetual imprisonment. This induced him to accept of an invitation, in 1628-9, to accompany the first settlers to New England, where he arrived in June 1629, and was elected teacher to the new colony; but not being able to bear the fatigues of a new settlement, he fell into a hectick, and died in the following winter, at the age of 43. "July 30. Whereas this Committee, by virtue of an order of both houses of parliament of the 2d of May last, have, by their order of the 17th of June last, ordered, that the yearly sum of 80*l.* should be paid, out of the profits of the impropriate rectory of Melton, in the county of Leicester, sequestered from Henry Hudson, esq. delinquent; and out of the impropriate rectory of Great Easton, in the said county, sequestered from the said sir Lewis Watson, delinquent; and out of the profits of the impropriate rectory of Garthorpe, in the said county, sequestered from the said sir Lewis Watson; to and for increase of the maintenance of Mr. Angel, a godly, learned, and orthodox Divine, for and during the continuance of his service and ministry in the town of Leicester, in the said county, and such other Ministers as should officiate in the said town: For that it is now attested that the said Henry Hudson hath compounded for his delinquency, whereby the sequestration of the said rectory of Melton is discharged: It is ordered, that the said former order be discharged; and, in lieu thereof, the said sum of 90*l.* be paid, according to the purport of the said order, out of the impropriate rectory of Sisonby, in the said county, sequestered from sir John Keate, delinquent, and out of the said impropriate rectories of Great Easton and Garthorpe, in the said county, sequestered from sir Lewis Watson, delinquent. And the sequestrators of the premises are required to pay the same accordingly, at such times and seasons of the year as the same shall grow due and payable [1]."

About the year 1650, Mr. Angel compiled the Catalogue of the Public Library at Leicester[2]. In the following year, declining to take the Engagement demanded by the Independents, he was dismissed from the Confratership; but was soon after appointed, by the Company of Mercers in London, to preach the Lecture founded at Grantham by the will of Elizabeth Viscountess Campden in 1642; and, settling at that place, "he shone as a burning light, until God translated him to shine above as a star for ever[3]." In September 1654, he was appointed an Assistant to the Commissioners of Lincolnshire for the ejection of scandalous and ignorant Ministers and Schoolmasters[4]. He died at Grantham in 1655; and was buried in that church[5], June 6, attended to the grave by many Divines of the neighbourhood, where a large oration of mortality and in praise of the defunct was delivered by Lawrence Sarson, B. D. of Emanuel College, Cambridge. Before he fell sick, he was several times heard to say, that it was his great desire to live to see the conclusion of the year 1660, hinting that he was very confident that there would be great revolutions in the kingdom of England. "As his name was Angel, so he was a man indeed of evangelical understanding and holiness, a burning and shining light, &c.[6]" It is not known that he published any works in his life-time; but there were posthumously printed, 1. "The right Government of the Thoughts; or, a Discovery of all vain, unprofitable, idle, and wicked Thoughts, &c. 1659," 8vo. 2. "Four Sermons; 1. and 2. The right ordering of the Conversation, two Sermons on Psalm i. last verse; 3. Funeral Sermon at the Burial of John Lord D'arcy, of Aston in Yorkshire, 27 Aug. 1636, Ps. xxxix. 5.; 4. Preparations to the Communion, 1 Cor. xi. 28; 1659," 8vo[7]. Another John Angel clerk, probably his son, has been noticed in p. 490.

7. William Symmes succeeded Mr. Angel; but was deprived before 1662, being intruded by the usurped powers, and a Nonconformist. In the act passed in 1657, he is called "Public Lecturer of the Borough of Leicester." He died Ang. 9, 1669, æt. 67, and was buried at St. Martin's church, where he is styled "Minister Jesu Christi; & Evangelii in hoc templo concionator."

7. Thomas Pestell junior; afterwards rector of Markfield in this county. See vol. III. p. 930.

8. John Newton. He resigned, and removed into Gloucestershire in 1697.

9. John Rogers; who took the degree of M. A. March 22, 1672, being then of St. John's college, Oxford[8]. He was chaplain to George earl of Berkeley. Mr. * * * *, a Clergyman (who was examined upon the trial of Ford lord Grey for debauching lady Henrietta Berkeley,) deposed, "that he was told by Mr. Rogers, lord Berkeley's chaplain, that Charnock was the man who took lady Henrietta away[9]." Mr. Rogers was presented by lord Berkeley to the rectory of Segrave in 1681[10]. The manor and rectory of Segrave were purchased by him of lord and lady Berkeley, March 9, 1684, for six hundred pounds and ten ginneys[11]; and in 1686, in his turn, he presented the Rev. George Berkeley, M. A. to the rectory. By a licence from the Commissary and Official of the Archdeaconry of Leicester, dated May 27, 1690, he was directed, as patron, to repair the chancel of the church of Segrave, and to sell the lead which covered the roof to defray part of the expence[12]. His patent of appointment to the Archdeaconry of Leicester is dated Nov. 29, 1703[13]. Whilst he was confrater, he had nearly lost his life in an attempt to part two of the brethren who were fighting, one of whom drew a dagger, and made a blow at him with it[14]. The dagger is still preserved in the family. Mr. Rogers married Sarah Wilshere, by whom he had a son John, who died young[15]; and a daughter Sarah, married to Walter Ruding, esq. of Westcotes; to whom, in 1704, he conveyed the advowson of Segrave[16]. Mr. Rogers resigned the confratership in 1713; and died May 17, 1715, æt. 67. His only publications were two Sermons[17]; Jonah, i. 6. preached before the Trinity-house, on the 30th of May, at the election of their Master, 1681, 4to; Psalm xxvii. 6. Thanksgiving, 4to, 1702. He furnished Bishop Gibson with many particulars of the county of Leicester[18]. Sarah his widow (to whom probably the next turn had been reserved) presented to the rectory of Segrave in 1715; and died Jan. 27, 1722, æt. 65. They were both buried in the chancel of St. Mary's, in Leicester[19].

10. In 1713, on the resignation of Archdeacon Rogers, George Anderson, M. A. rector of Lutterworth[20], was appointed by the following patent:

"Anna, Dei gratiâ, Magne Britannie, Francie, & Hibernie Regina, fidei defensor, &c. Omnibus ad quos, &c. Sciatis quod nos, per advisamentum & consensum Cancellarii & Concilii nostri Ducatûs nostri Lancastrie, dedimus & concessimus, ac per presentes, pro nobis, heredibus & successoribus nostris, damus & concedimus Georgio Anderson clerico, & in artibus magistro, pensionem sive salarium quam vel quod Petrus Wood, Galfridus Johnson, Nathaniel Sampson, Thomas Sacheverell, Johannes Angel, Thomas Pestell, Johannes Newton, ac Johannes Rogers, clerici, successivè nuper habuerunt, seu eorum aliquis nuper habuit, in domo eleemosynariâ vocatâ Wigston's Alms-house, in villâ sive burgo nostro Leicestrie, in comitatu nostro Leicestrie, ac locum sive promotionem fratris seu confratris in domo eleemosynariâ predictâ; parcellâ Ducatûs nostri Lancastrie, predicti, in dicto comitatu Leicestrie; habend' prefato Georgio Anderson, durante vitâ naturali ipsius Georgii Anderson, serviend' & faciend' in domo predictâ prout predicti Petrus Wood, Galfridus Johnson, Nathaniel Sampson, Thomas Sacheverell, Johannes Angel, Thomas Pestel, Johannes Newton, ac predictus Johannes Rogers, fecerunt, seu eorum aliquis fecit, aut licitè facere debuit, ac percipiend' annuatim pensionem ac salarium predict' per manus receptorum particularium nostri & successorum nostrorum possessionum nostrarum in dicto comitatu nostro Leicestrie, in jure ducatûs nostri Lancastrie, in tam amplis modo & formâ prout prefati Petrus Wood, Galfridus Johnson, Nathaniel Sampson, Thomas Sampson, Johannes Angel, Thomas Pestell, Johannes Newton, aut prefatus Johannes Rogers, nuper habuerunt aut perceperunt, seu eorum aliquis nuper habuit sive percepit. 11. Robert Anderson; who was then sickly; and, dying May 17, 1717, was buried in the chapel of the Hospital, May 19.

12. John Jackson, rector of Rossington, B. A. succeeded; and was made master in 1729. See p. 498.

13. Philip Hacket, rector of South Croxton[1], succeeded in 1729; and died April 17, 1735.

14. William Tiffin, a very worthy, modest clergyman, 1735. He was author of a Treatise on Swift Writing; i. e. Short Hand[2]; but it never got on.

"Currant verba licet manus est vel ocior illis Nondum lingua suum dextra peregit opus[3]."

Mr. Tiffin was a Norfolk man, recommended to Mr. Jackson, master of the Hospital, by Mr. Pyle of Lynn Regis, and made confrater at the instance of Mr. Jackson; whom he assisted in his various collations of the New Testament[4]. The place was particularly acceptable to Mr. Tiffin, as not requiring subscription to the Articles, to which, it seems, he had some objection. He died in December 1759; and was buried in the cross aile of St. Martin's church, under the steeple. A brass plate, with a Latin inscription written by Mr. Jackson, was put upon his grave; but, a new tenant succeeding, the plate was taken away. Being unwilling to subscribe, he had no other preferment.

15. Thomas Ludlam, of St. John's college, Cambridge; B. A. 1748; M. A. 1757; succeeded in 1760; and is the present confrater (1807.) He is also rector of Foston. Mr. Ludlam is brother to the very eminent mathematician, the Rev. William Ludlam[5]; and is himself a writer of considerable merit; as appears by his "Four Essays, on the ordinary and extraordinary Operations of the Holy Spirit; on the Application of Experience to Religion; and on Enthusiasm and Fanaticism. To which is prefixed, a preliminary Dissertation, on the Nature of clear Ideas, and the Advantage of distinct Knowledge[6]. In these Essays, the Nature of the Opinions maintained, the Justness of the Reasoning employed, and the Propriety of the Language adopted in the Scripture Characters of the Rev. Thomas Robinson[7], are fully considered, 1797," 8vo. These were followed by "Six Essays upon Theological, to which are added Two upon Moral Subjects, 1799[8]."

The Confrater of Wigston's Hospital preaches four times in a year in the chapel of the Old Hospital in the Newark; for which he has an augmentation to his stipend, by patent from the Duchy of Lancaster during pleasure[9].

⁂ There are only 9 women, besides 3 keepers; and these keepers have a claim to admission after certain years service, for which service they receive no more pay than the others, but are admitted younger, that they may have strength to do the business of the house. When the claims of these keepers happen to follow close to each other, which is the case at present (1790), a long time elapses before there is a vacancy for any but such as are proper to exercise the office of keepers or nurses.

[2] Mr. Tiffin published, "Proposals for printing, by Subscription, a Help to the Art of Swift Writing: Being an Alphabet chiefly contrived for that Purpose, easy to learn, and corresponding in its Elements to the several distinguishable Articulations of the English Tongue, with as great Exactness (especially in the Consonants) as the Author could attain, consistent with Swiftness of Writing, and Facility of Learning. To which are added, Suitable Rules and Expedients of joining Letters and abridging Words; some of which may be practised with Advantage in any other Alphabet, and most of them invented by the Author, William Tiffin, Chaplain of Wigston's Hospital in Leicester. With an Appendix, containing Characters and Instructions for the Use of a larger Set of Vowels, wherein a philosophical Exactness is further pursued." The specimen consists of eight heroic verses (of ten syllables each) taken in succession from a noted English Poet; wherein no character is employed but what is purely alphabetical; nothing is omitted but what every writer will find to be natural and convenient to omit, when he understands the character, and writes in haste; nothing but what may all be inserted in its proper place without confusion. The price to subscribers is 2*s*. 6*d*. paid at the time of subscribing, and 2*s*. 6*d*. more upon the delivery of the work: whoever subscribes for six shall have a seventh gratis. To non-subscribers the author will sell none under 7*s*. 6*d*. Subscriptions are taken in by Messrs. Osborne at Gray's Inn, Noon in Cheapside, Knapton in St. Paul's church-yard, Whiston and Reeve in Fleet-street, Dodsley in Pall-Mall, Fletcher in Oxford, Thurlbourn in Cambridge, and Leake at Bath.

The surname of WIGSTON was originally derived from one of the two townships of that name in this county. The earliest whom I have found mentioned is William Wigston[1], who was mayor of Leicester in 1448; again in 1459; and a burgess in parliament for the town of Leicester in 1455.

Roger Wigston was thrice mayor of Leicester, 1465, 1472, and 1487[2]; and burgess in parliament for the town in 1488. He held, under the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis, a tenement in Braunston gate, paying annually one hen, and two pence[3].

John Wigston was mayor in 1469; burgess in parliament for the town in 1477; and mayor again in 1480[4]. He purchased from John Belgrave the tenement situate on the West side of St. Martin's church-yard, where afterwards the Hospital was built[5]; and for this tenement he paid an annual acknowledgement of two capons to the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis[6].

Thomas Wigston, merchant of the Staple of Calais, died in 1502; and his wife Elizabeth in 1503. They were both buried at Belgrave, under a tomb which has long been demolished[7].

William Wigston the elder is said, in the most antient Hall-book of the Corporation of Leicester now extant, to be "the son and heir and executor of Roger Wigston, esq.[8]" He was thrice mayor, 1498, 1511, and 1520[9]; and had three sons, William, Thomas, and Roger[10].

William Wigston junior, the founder of the Hospital, was a merchant of the Staple; burgess in parliament for the town of Leicester in 1504; and mayor in 1510[11]. He died in 1513[12]; and was buried in the chapel of the chantry which he had founded in the collegiate church of the Newark. The house which he built for the two chantry priests in the Newark is still standing, with his arms over the portal.

Agnes Wigston his widow (by whom he left no issue), by her last will, gave to the master and confrater the lease of the tithe corn of the South field of Leicester, the term of which was not expired in 1576[13].

Thomas, the next brother to William, was in holy orders, and a prebendary of St. Mary's in the Newark; where he died, and was buried.

"On the side of the church ly 3 Wigeston's, greate benefactors to the College; one of them was a prebendary there, and made the Free Grammar Schole[14]."

Roger Wigston, the third brother, who was a burgess in parliament for the town of Leicester in 1523, and sheriff in 1541, has been noticed in p. 471; and his son William in p. 476.

Sir Francis Wigston, sheriff of Warwickshire and Leicestershire in 1557, is the last of the name that occurs in either of those counties. He is supposed to have died young, and unmarried; as the property at Wolston and Pinley priory in Warwickshire, on the death of Roger, passed to two daughters and coheirs[15].

In the course of my researches into the history of this family, I have met with none of the same name, except John Wigston, esq. of Trent Park, near Barnet; to whom I am obliged for the communication of some of the above dates; but whose relationship to the Founder of the Hospital I have not been able to trace.

THE TOWN LIBRARY, is situated on the North side of Wigston's Hospital; and joins the hall formerly belonging to St. George's guild, and which is now the Guildhall of the Borough.

The room which contains the Library is ornamented with two portraits, which in 1790 were thus described by Mr. Bickerstaffe:

"Here enframed is the figure of St. Hierome, in a scarlet cap and gown, his name prefixed, a candle burning low, left fore-finger end resting on a scull; a pen and ink, a time-piece, and "Surgite, venite ad judicium;" right hand supporting his contemplative head.

"Over the door of the Library, within a black close cap edged with flowered white, with a plain fair tippet not two inches below the collar, like the modern ornament of boys, appears with whiskers, thus announced: "M. S. Thomas Hayne[1], qui inter eruditos & optimos nominari meruit, Thrussingtonâ hujus agr. Leicestriensis oriundus, in coll. Linc. apud Oxoni A. M. patriam & hanc villam pecuniâ & redditibus quotannis in egenos erogandâ devinxit: & præter multa piæ libertatibus testimonia passim collata, Bibliothecam hanc supellectile libraria munificè adornavit. Diem obiit Julii 27, an. Chr. 1645, ætat. 64."

The Library in 1790 contained 948 books; and the more curious miscellaneous articles which occurred to the researches of Mr. Bickerstaffe were,

An Hebrew book in Syriac characters, curiously written on paper, bordered with gold.

Walton's Polyglott, 6 vols.; with Castelli Lexicon, 2 vols.

The New Testament translated into the Indian language; Cambridge, 1671.

A valuable edition of Erpenius's Arabic Grammar.

And an Arabic MS. with many leaves torn out by ignorant visitors.

The MSS. were then only five; viz.

1. "Biblia Sacra, Latinè."
2. "Novum Testamentum Græcè;" commonly called the Codex Leicestrensis.
3. A Latin Bible, including Apocrypha and New Testament. It has a Prologus of two leaves and a quarter, and after the index "W. Stanlay, alio no'i'e Walue, scripsit." At the end, "Edwardus Dei gr'a rex Angl', &c." It is bound in leather, and ornamented with the Royal arms.
4. "Psalmi Davidis."
5. On sacred subjects; the title wanting.

From the same attentive observer I had several other particulars; which are superseded by the following very ample details, transcribed by the late Mr. Richard Weston, from an authentic document, intituled, "A Booke made and provided to preserve the memoriall, and to eternize and immortalize the names, of such good men who heretofore have bine, or hereafter shall and will be, benefactors to this Publique Librarie: Hoping that this may be a speculative and exemplarie motive to stirr up and incite many others to add somthing to this good worke: And all to the glorie of Almightie God, the helpe and benefitt of Ministers and Scholers; the solace and recreation of well-willers to Learning; and, finally, to the everlasting fame, honour, and renowne, of this Corporation. Anno Domini 1644.

"We that are nam'd and listed in this Booke,
As coadjutors to so good a cause,
For theise our Workes do not desire or looke
To gett a vaine and popular applause.

Nor do we come of Merit-mongers breed,
That sound their trumpets to be prais'd of men;
Noryet doe spring from any Popish seed, [Heaven:
Which thinke good workes alone may gaine

But what we doe, we doe to magnifie
The sacred name of the Omnipotent;
And that our workes our sincere faith may trie,
No other thinges or by respect's are meant.

Let Momus then, and all impostum'd tongues,
Forbear to barke, when any good is wrought;
And let them vent their base malignant songes
On such designes which of themselves are nought.

And still we wish that more new Frends may give More Bookes and Presents to this Tresurie,
That so their names recorded here may live
In honor, fame, and immortalitie.

But blest be God, who laid the corner stonn,
And was cheife Founder of this house of store;
He mov'd men's minds, and so did sett them on T' improve this worke, which was infirme before.

Come therefore, come, Students of ech degree,
Come when you please, and visit this our Muse;
All frendes to lerning may hither welcome be,
And read such bookes as they affect and choose."

An Account of the Foundation.

"This Librarie was erected and builded, at the onely cost and charges of the Corporation of Leicester, att the motion, and by the approbation, of the Reverend Father in God John Lord Bishop of Lincolne, and by the prosecution of Mr. John Angell, publique lecturer for the sayd Burrough of Leicester. The Building whereof was begun in the time of the maioralty of Mr. John Norrice, anno Domini 1632, Thomas Somerfeild and Richard Ludlam being chamberlins; and finished in the second time of the mairolty of Mr. Nicholas Gilliot, anno 1633, Thomas Bursnall and Alexander Baker being chamberlins."

A Catalogue of the Names of its Benefactors, together with their Donations.

"Henry Earle of Huntingdon, Lord President of York, gave many bookes heretofore, which then weare placed in the parish church of St. Martin in Leicester, for the help and benefit of Ministers and Scholers. But, upon the building and foundation of this Librarie, and by the consent and approbation of thaforsayd Lord Bishop of Lincoln, all those bookes which weare of the donation of the sayd earl of Huntindon, and many other bookes given then by former Benefactors, weare removed and placed in this Library, for the better furnishing thereof.

"The aforesayd Reverend Father in God John Lord Bp. of Lincolne gave, towards the furnishing of this Librarye with bookes, the somm of tenn poundes.

"Ther was a generall and voluntarie collection in and throughout the Corporation of this Burrough of Leicester, for the raising of a somme of money, to be bestowed in bookes for the better furnishing of this Librarye; whereupon many gave willingly and bountefully. Insomuch, that the totall of the somme collected did arise to a great quantitie and proportion, and was bestowed in bookes, according to the intent and mind of the Corporation, and doners thereof.

"A general collection was likewise made in every Deanary in this County of Leicester, amongst the Ministers and Clergie, to raise money for the aforsayd use; wherein the Ministers shewed their good and great respect to so good a worke, and gave liberally in mony, and some in books. The several sommes collected in every Deanary are hereunto subscribed; videlicet,

The General Historie of the Turkes; and
The unmasking of a Masse-monger; and
A Dissuasive from the Errours of the Tyme; both bound together."

The preceding Benefactions are undated; and, probably, were all bestowed before the regular and well-digested Catalogue of this Library was taken by Mr. Angel, the learned confrater of Wigston's Hospital; which, by the favour of the Rev. Rogers Ruding, I have now before me, in the small but neat hand-writing of Mr. Angel, whose mottoes to it are,

"Qualis cujuscunque animi affectus, talis est homo."
"Ubi amor, ibi oculus."

The Books are by him catalogued in classes; in which Theology has by much the largest share. In that class are several Bibles, of which the principal are,

Hutteri Biblia, usque ad Ruth; Noreberg. 1539.
Novum Test. Græcè, Stephani, Paris, 1550.
Vetus Testamentum, cum var. Lect. Francof. 1597.
Biblia Junii, Tremellii, et Bezæ; Hannov. 1624.
Septuaginta, cum Nov. Test. Græco-Latinè, 3 vols. Paris, 1638.
Tindal's and Cranmer's Bibles.
Testamentum Novum, Rheims, 1582.
—— —— Heb. & Lat.; Paris, 1584.
—— —— Græc. & Lat. Lubini, 1614.
Two Missals.
Several valuable Concordances and Lexicons.

The Libri Historici, Libri Oratorii & Poetici, and Libri Philosophici, Medici, Grammaticales, & Mathematici, contain several good books, and 56 volumes of "Divers and miscellaneous Treatises," bound together; the whole then consisting of 876 articles.

Mr. Angel, of whom an account has been already given in p. 561, removed from Leicester soon after he had completed this Catalogue; but the entries in the Library-book are thus continued:

"Mr. John Angell, a most famous and reverend Divine, Publique Lecturer for the Burrough of Leicester, for many yeares together Confrater of Wigston's Hospitall, now called The New Hospitall, was a speciall and liberall benefactor and well-wisher to this Librarie; and did not onely excite and stirr up many, both Divines and Gentlemen, to offer and extend their guiftes to this TREASURY, but was a pattern and example himself, to doe that which he persuaded others to doe; and gave above twenty worthy bookes, as well Commentaries, as also other works of divers Divines, very useful and necessary for this Librarie.

In the year 1802, the late Mr. Richard Weston (from whose MSS. I have taken the foregoing extracts) announced an intention of publishing "An Account of the Foundation of the Town Library of Leicester; with the Names of its Benefactors, from its Institution to the last, the Rev. Mr. Harryman in 1743; a Catalogue of the Books and MSS. contained in it; its present neglected Condition, and a Plan for improving and enlarging it;" but, from the want of sufficient encouragement, and from, I am sorry to say, the res angustæ domi was never able to complete his publication.

Mr. Weston thus proceeds: "This Library has met with very extraordinary fate; and it is with regret I mention it, that I have now described the last Benefactor. A period of 59 years without the addition of a single book to it—nor any notice taken of it, except that, soon after that time, I remember several of the books were fresh bound, and some repaired, under the direction of Mr. Tiffin.

"Within about seven years too after that period, five gentlemen of eminence in the literary way, who lived adjoining to it, published the following volumes:

"Thomas Carte, esq. son of the Rev. Samuel Carte, vicar of St. Martin's; History of England, 4 vols. fol. 1747.

"Rev. John Jackson, Master of Wigston's Hospital; Chronology, 3 vols. 4to. 1750.

"Rev. William Tiffin, Confrater of Wigston's Hospital; a Treatise on Short Hand, 4to. 1751.

"John-Gilbert Cooper, esq.; The Life of Socrates; 8vo. Letters concerning Taste; 8vo.

"Notwithstanding all these gentlemen lived in or near the Church-yard, not one of their Works were deposited in it; nor, on a strict examination of the donations, and the Catalogue, can I find a single book from any of the Authors, either of the Town or County, though so many have been produced within the last century. And though the Librarian, Jacob Bauthumley, in the year 1676, wrote 'An Historical Relation of the Persecution of the Church,' with a Dedication to the Mayor, Aldermen, &c. of the Corporation, complimenting them on their 'pious devotion to Religion and Learning,' yet the work is not to be found; nor any mention of it in the Catalogue taken in 1773.

"Great depredations have been committed on several of the Books.

"A MS Bible, written in the time of Edward the First, on vellum, the first letters of each chapter of which are illuminated with light sky-blue and red alternately, has some leaves cut out at the beginning, and above 200 of the bottom margin cut out, even into the writing; and seem to have been of no use to any body except to a book-binder as bands for binding. One of the covers also is torn off with the chain. This MS. was the gift of Mr. Thomas Stanhope, minister of St. Margaret, Leicester, and written by William Stanlay[2]; and is very well worth examining, the writing being remarkably neat and uniform, and the ink remains of a beautiful black, although written as above.

"The Plates in the Anatomy of Plants, &c. by Malpighius, and two volumes of the Philosophical Transactions, are many of them torn, and some missing.

"Purchas's Travels, in five volumes in folio, have not one quarter of the work remaining; and many others of the most valuable works are much damaged, especially a book in one of the Oriental languages.

"Gesner's History of Plants, folio, missing, which was there in 1772, as I then copied his life from it; and many more I expect when they are searched for.

"The chains affixed to most of the books cause great damage to the binding, and ought to be taken off.

"The Library has remained in this supine, neglected condition, getting worse every year, many of the books being much dirtied lately, the last time it was white-washed; and in 1793, at Mr. Mansfield's feast, part of the company dining there, some hundreds of the books were removed from their places, and have lain in a confused state ever since, without being restored to their proper places.

"In 1796, I presented to Mr. Clarke, then mayor, hints for improving it; but it still remains in the same state; and the motive of publishing this account is, to shew its present condition, and to stir up an emulation in the inhabitants of the Town and County, particularly those of the Town, to improve and increase it by a collection of modern books, to make it of more general utility. Public Libraries are of such benefit to mankind, that it is unnecessary to enlarge on their usefulness; and when one has been established, it is to be lamented that it is not encouraged and improved, especially in this enlightened age.

"Having fairly explained the condition in which it is, I shall beg leave to offer to the publick my plan for improving it. The Catalogue, being printed, will give information of the books it contains.

[2] See before, p. 505.

"As soon as this Work is printed, I propose to put 50 copies of it into the hands of some of the Booksellers of the Town and County[1]; and the profit arising from the sale to be applied for the use of the Library, with twenty volumes which I have published, and a few others; and should hope, that every Author now living will follow this example: and if the Relations of the Deceased would do the same, a large number of books would soon be collected. And when such a plan is once really begun to be put into execution, there is no doubt but that, in this scientific and enlightened age, the Nobility, Gentry, and Clergy of the county, would contribute either in books or money, especially if it be once properly set on foot in the Town."

The Codex Leicestrensis (so long and so justly the pride of this Library) was sent to Oxford, in 1671, by the especial permission of a Common Hall[2] of the Borough of Leicester, for the use of Dr. Mill[3]; whose collation of it is thus noticed by Wetstein, in his Prolegomena, p. 53:

"Codex Leicestrensis, totum N. T. complectens, quem Thomas Hayne, Magister Artium, natus Thrussingtoni, vico comitatûs Leicestriensis, dedit anno 1669[4], Bibliothecæ urbis Leicestriæ. Est seculi xiv in foliis tum membranaceis tum chartaceis temere permistis scriptus. Incipit à Matth. xviii. 5. Deficit ab Act. x. 45. ad xiv. 17; à Judæ 7 ad finem; ab Apoc. xxi. 1. ad finem libri. Ejus Collationem edidit Jo. Millius, sed ita ut & plurima omiserit, & multa perperam notaverit, & uti suspicor frequenter Lincolniensem pro Leicestriensi posuerit. Epistolæ ad Hebræos præfigit partem prologi Euthaliani, qui est apud Millium anonymus ex Oecumenico. In hoc codice historia adulteræ non reperitur suo loco Jo. viii. (quod Millius affirmat, Prol. 1506) sed ad finem capitis Lucæ xxi. Historia verò de sudore sanguineo Christi ex Luc. xxii. 43. 44. transposita est post Matthæi xxvi. 39. Post Evangelia sequuntur Epistolæ Paulinæ; deinde Acta, &c. Titulum Evangeliorum habet singularem, ἐκ τȣ͂ κατὰ Μάρκον Εὐαγγελίȣ, ἐκ τȣ͂ κατὰ Λȣκᾶν Εὐαγγελίȣ, ἐκ τȣ͂ κατὰ Ἰωάννην Εὐαγγελίȣ. Multò autem accuratiùs hunc codicem contulerunt Jo. Jakson & Gulielmus Tiffin, cujus variantes lectiones margini editionis Oxoniensis in octavo adscripsit Rev. Gee, pastor apud Leicestrienses, quod exemplar cum Rev. Cæsar de Missy sibi comparâsset, mecum liberaliter communicavit anno 1748. Huic codici gemellus ac similis est Paris. 6. quem supra descripsi n. 13. Alterutro etiam aut utroque usus est Erasmus, qui inde lectiones singulares in Annotationibus producit. Vid. in Marc. iii. 14. & 16.; iv. 21. 30. 40.; v. 33.; vi. 3.; viii. 11. 26.; ix. 11.; xiv. 36. 41.; Luc. xviii. 7.; Jo. vii. 26.; xi. 47.; Act. xiv. 19. Præcipuè vero notandum, hunc codicem ex versione Latinâ interpolatum fuisse: inscriptiones Epistolarum Pauli Latinos sequuntur, ordo verborum idem est ac in Latinis. Consensum cum codice Cantabrigiensi etiam Millius observavit. Vide Marc. ii. 14.; Luc. xvi. 21.; xix. 37.; xx. 47.; xxiii. 29.; Jo. iv. 43.; v. 9. 19.; vi. 23. 24.; vii. 31.; viii. 24.; ix. 4.; xiii. 5.; xiv. 17.; xvi. 18.; quod & Bengelius fassus est, in introd. p. 415, scribens 'in Evangelistis Latinizare Leicestriensem.' Idem poterat affirmare de Epistolis. Vid. Rom. v. 18.; viii. 38.; xiv. 23.; xv. 23.; xvi. 9.; 1 Cor. i. 15.; 2 Cor. vi. 15.; xii. 19.; κατέναντι Θεῷ. 1 Tim. vi. 19."

April 24, 1689, Giles Coker was elected Library-keeper, in the room of William Higgs, promoted to be mace-bearer. Mr. Coker died in or before the month of October in the same year.

June 27, 1694, Samuel Wilcocks was chosen Library-keeper.

[1] It is much to be regretted that Mr. Weston did not live to give effect to his benevolent intentions.—This very useful Writer, who died at Leicester, Oct. 20, 1806, in his 74th year, had formerly been a thread hosier in that town; and was author of several valuable publications, as will appear from the following list, communicated by himself not long before his death: 1. Tracts on Agriculture and Gardening; with a Chronological Catalogue of Authors, from the Year 1480 to 1773," 1769, 8vo. 2. Second edition, enlarged, 1773. 3. "Gardener's Pocket Calendar," 1774, 18mo. 4, 5. Second edition, 17..; third edition, 1783. 6. Fourth edition, in 12mo, 1787. 7. "Gardener's and Planter's Calendar, containing the Method of raising Timber Trees, Fruit Trees, and Quick for Hedges; with Directions for Farming, and managing a Garden, every Month in the Year," 1773, 12mo. 8. Second edition. 9, 10, 11, 12. "The Universal Botanist," 4 vols. 8vo, 20 copper-plates, 1770, 1773. 13. "The English Flora, describing 4000 Plants cultivated in the Nurseries," 1778, 8vo. 14. Supplement to ditto, 1780. 15. Treatise on Alabaster, 8 vols. 179.. 16. "The Leicester Directory," 1794, 12mo. 17. With Supplements. 18. "The Gentleman and Lady's Gardener," in 8vo (for Mr. Edmondes, seedsman), 1774. 19. Ellis's Gardener's Calendar," 1774, 12mo (for Mr. Richardson, bookseller). (Printed of the above Work 21,000.) 20. "The Nurseryman and Seedsman's Catalogue of Trees, Shrubs, Plants, and Seeds, sold by them," 1774—1785, 12mo.—To this ingenious Writer the Gentleman's Magazine was also indebted for several useful and entertaining articles; particularly "A Catalogue of various Gardeners' Catalogues published in this Kingdom," vol. LXXIV. p. 1103; vol. LXXV. pp. 34, 1133. "Directions for managing Strawberries in Summer," vol. LXXV. pp. 504, 611; "The Natural History of Tobacco; the different Uses to which it is applied; its native Place of Growth; Introduction into Europe, and into this Country; and Method of cultivating it in England," vol. LXXVI. p. 195. "A Review of the principal Authors on Horticulture and Botany," ibid. 997; "Critical Remarks on Botanical Writers, written in 1802," vol. LXXVII. p. 518.—Many others are the Works of which Mr. Weston had formed more than the outline; and which, at various times, he proposed to give to the publick. Among these was one for which he issued Proposals in 1800, under the title of "Leicestriana; or, A Collection of Fugitive Pieces, in Verse and Prose, arranged in Chronological Order." For this Work he had formed a large collection, "having found many amongst the papers of an Uncle then lately deceased, who was curious in preserving literary curiosities." He had also nearly all Mr. Rozell's Works, and several of Mr. Bickerstaffe's. In the same year he announced as preparing for the press, and nearly completed, to be published by subscription, in 8vo. in three or four numbers, "A Botanical Dictionary, explaining the Words in the Writings of Linnæus, particularly in the Genera and Species Plantarum, and Systema Vegetabilium; with their Derivation from the Greek and Latin; the Greek written also in English Letters. With about Twenty Copper-plates, for explaining the Linnæan System. On Two Copper-plates will be explained the Genders of 1344 Genera of Plants, by their Terminations. The rest of the Plants are already engraved." At the same time he advertised as also preparing for the press, "The Literary History of Leicestershire; containing an Account of the Authors, Natives or Residents, of the Town or County; a Catalogue of their Works; and a Collection of Fugitive Pieces, from the Years 1500 to 1801, arranged in Chronological Order, with Anecdotes relating to the Authors, and Extracts from their Works. To which are added, an Account of the Foundation of the Town Library, &c. (see p. 509.)—"As there is no Work extant in which there is a general account of the ingenious and learned which the Town and County have produced, I flatter myself that such a publication will not be unacceptable to the publick. As many valuable fugitive pieces have been printed in a detached manner, and are with difficulty found; these I have been collecting for several years, with many in manuscript, as this is not intended as a Catalogue of Books only; and flatter myself the collection will be found more numerous and entertaining than could have been expected. This has been increased by a large number of a gentleman deceased, curious in preserving such things. The Addresses from Candidates at some of the late Elections to the Electors, worthy of notice, will also be inserted, and remarkable epitaphs. With this plan, I have inserted the names of several Authors, and some of their Works. The living ones I intend applying to by letter, or in person. As to the deceased, I shall think myself obliged to the survivors of the family, or any persons who will be so kind as to give me information of their Works, or any anecdotes relating to them." In 1805, he published Proposals for "The Natural History of Strawberries, describing above Seventy Species and Varieties, their native Places of Growth, and Introduction into England; with the modern Improvements in their Cultivation, to have a regular Succession of Fruit in every Month of the Year. Embellished with Ten Copper-plates, explaining the Fructification of the Flower; the Leaves, Flowers, and Fruit of their natural Size and Colour, with a Steam-Flue and Water-Flue for Forcing them. To be printed in small 8vo, in Five Numbers." He had also prepared for the press, a small "Treatise on the Management of Fish and Fish Ponds, translated from the French; with Additions adapted to this Country."—But none of these Proposals have been carried into effect.

[2] Dr. Farmer, who cites "the Book of the Catalogue," observes that it is there called "a Greek MS. of the Latin Testament."

[3] In Mr. Jackson's copy of Kuster's New Testament, 1712, many of the MSS. of Dr. Mill are collated anew, and several MSS. added which Dr. Mill did not see; almost all the various readings of all the most antient Christian Writers are added, &c. and many thousand errors of Dr. Mill's edition are corrected. In a sheet or two of paper, prefixed to the Book itself, is a fuller account: "In hoc exemplari excuso N. T. habentur omnes variæ Lectiones Cod. MS. The FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

"The most antient mention," says Mr. Carte, "that I have met with of any School in Leicester is in a deed without date, whereby Robert Fitz-John, of Whitwick, granted to Adam le Sage, of Torp, formerly rector of the schools in Leicester, and to his heirs or assigns, certain lands in the field of Rotebi; to which were witnesses, sir Peter son of Roger, John son of the same, knights; John de Anesti, John de Lumchamp, William Bate of Groby, &c. [Q. Whether the first of these witnesses be not the same with Peter son of Roger, who was the first mayor of Leicester in 1246, and so continued till 1256 inclusively?]

"The next mention that I find made of a school here is, that a bishop of Carlisle had given land for the maintaining a free-school in the parish of St. Margaret. This bishop I take to have been John Penny, who was abbot of Leicester, afterwards bishop of Carlisle, and lies buried in St. Margaret's church. This land, it is said, Mr. John Beaumont about 1541 (at which time he was recorder, and a commissioner) sold away; but by what authority doth not appear. Certain it is, the Corporation was dissatisfied with what he had done; and therefore, March 11, 6 Edw. VI. at a common hall, they resolved to endeavour the recovery of it; and for that and some other purposes sent Mr. Robert Boughton, vicar of St. Martin's, to London, whose charges were borne, half by the town, and half by the parish of St. Margaret: but what progress he made in the matter I find not; only the event shews that this attempt proved abortive; and it is possible that the death of King Edward VI. might occasion them to desist from prosecution of the matter.

"The origin of the Free-school is, by all persons whom I have discoursed with about it, computed to have been in 1573; which is an error in itself, and an occasion of other errors; and therefore I shall deliver my opinion, and then mention some of the circumstances on which it is founded.

"My opinion is, that Thomas Wigston, prebendary of the church of Newark, brother of the famous William Wigston, founded the school in the place where the school-house now stands, and that he endowed it with lands; which, together with the guardianship or oversight of the school, he entrusted with the master and confrater of his brother's Hospital, charging them to pay 10*l.* a-year to the master of the school; and that thus it continued till the augmentation and new establishing of it about 1573. The circumstances upon which my opinion is grounded are as follows: 1. Leland asserts that Thomas Wigston made the Free-school in Leicester[1]. 2. John Pott, schoolmaster of Leicester, is said to be one of the fugitives that were gone beyond sea, contrary to the Statute 13 Eliz. 3. I have seen, among other papers concerning the New Hospital, a rental of lands in 1561 and 1562, out of which the schoolmaster is paid. 4. It was agreed, at a common hall, June 30, 1564, that one of the bells of St. Peter's church should be sold, to repair the School-house. All which was before the supposed foundation of the Free-school, and confirms what I have suggested. And hence we learn how it comes to pass that the Master and Confrater of Wigston's Hospital are so much concerned in the visitation and government of the School, though Queen Elizabeth in her grant takes no notice of them, but only of the Mayor, &c. Hence also we may observe how erroneously the 20*l.* a-year, which is paid by the Hospital to the Schoolmaster, is all of it called the earl of Huntingdon's gift; whereas the earl by his deed, gave only a rent-charge of 10*l.* a-year; and the other 10*l.* arises from the lands entrusted to the Hospital for maintenance of the School, &c.

"April 7, 15 Eliz. the queen, in consideration of 35*l.* having granted to the mayor and co-burgesses of Leicester the materials of the decayed church of St. Peter[2]; they, according to their obligation, set about building a school-house anew (which I suppose was on the same ground as the former) because I find no account of the purchase of the site of it, and finished it the next year; and at the same time they erected a new house at the North end of the school-house for the head schoolmaster to dwell in, and thereto laid all the backside that lately was in the occupation of Johnson, a mason, reserving to themselves the rent of 20*s.* a-year[3]. For defraying these and some other charges, they laid themselves, the twenty-four at 2*s.* and the forty-eight at 1*s.* each, May 7, 16 Eliz.

"The school is situated on the East side of the Highcross-street, over against the Blue-boar-lane, and is separated from the County Gaol by Free-school-lane. The building is a rugged pile of forest-stone, interspersed with some pieces of wrought free-stone, lying in all directions. It is covered with slate. The upper room is assigned to the master, and the lower or ground-room to the two ushers, whereof the upper teaches the Latin grammar, and the under-usher English, all which have their salaries out of the benefactions[4]."

The stone in the left tablet in front is of modern erection, and has the following names of benefactors:

"Queen Elizabeth gave an annuity of 10*l.* per annum for maintenance of the head-usher in the School, to be received of the Auditors for the Honour of Leicester, at Michaelmas and Lady-day. This is now paid at Michaelmas only; but is usually paid quarterly to the usher.

Henry earl of Huntingdon gave 10*l.* per annum to the head-master of the School, to be paid by the Corporation out of certain grounds which they purchased of Mr. Freak, due at Michaelmas and Lady-day, and to be paid to the master of the New Hospital; which is done once in the year, at Michaelmas; and the master of the Hospital pays it to the master of the School at Michaelmas and Lady-day. Also, 10*l.* per annum more is paid him out of the chamber of the Town at the same times during pleasure.

The same noble earl, Oct. 11, 18 Eliz. gave an annuity of 40*s.* apiece to two poor scholars in the School, and 3*l.* apiece to two at the University, which none of them were to enjoy above five years.

Sir Ralph Rawlett gave, out of his manor of Thedingworth, an annuity of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for the under-usher of the School, due at Michaelmas and Lady-day.—These lands were purchased by Serjeant Newdigate; and the annuity is paid by his heirs. The Town pays the under-usher quarterly.

Mr. William Norrice, once one of the aldermen, gave an annuity of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for the head-usher, payable out of a close in the Abbey-gate. This is usually paid to the head-usher at Michaelmas and Lady-day. The said usher was enjoined by Mr. Norrice to bring ten of his scholars to the house of the said Mr. Norrice by North-gate upon the second Tuesday after Trinity Sunday in the forenoon, and there to sing the 113th Psalm.

Mr. Robert Heyrick, once alderman, gave an annuity of 13*s.* 4*d.* per annum for the under-usher, payable out of his lands in Leicester, at Michaelmas only. This is paid out of the Grey Friers by the heirs of the said Robert Heyrick.

Mr. Tobias Heyrick, son and heir of the aforesaid Robert Heyrick, added to the said annuity 6*s.* 8*d.* for the same use, paid by his heirs at Michaelmas only.

Mr. Thomas Clarke, alderman, gave an annuity of 20*s.* for the under-usher, payable out of a piece of ground adjoining to the Soar, called The Water Laggs, at Michaelmas and Lady-day. This is paid to the usher by the chamberlains.

Margaret Hobby, widow, gave 12*s.* annuity for the under-usher, payable out of a house in the South gate. It is usually paid by the tenant to the usher. Item, there is paid out of the said house yearly, for the use of the poor, 12*d.* The said house was, in 1712, in the tenure of widow Owin.

Mrs. Dorothy Baker gave a sum of money to the Corporation, in trust, that they should yearly give to the ushers of the said School 10*s.* apiece, that each of them should teach their scholars to write.

Mr. James Ellis senior, an alderman, gave 26*s.* 8*d.* yearly out of a house in the parish of All Saints, in tenure of William Noone senior, baker, for the head-usher[1]."

"The masters' salaries, &c. are; the head master, 40*l.* a-year, a house with entrance-money from half a guinea to a guinea; the first usher, 24*l.* a-year, with a small garden-ground, entrance from a crown upwards; the second usher, 19*l.* 16*s.* with a house during pleasure, set at four guineas a-year, and no entrance-money. Scanty appointments for liberal education, but respectable in the reign of the foundress[2]."

By the Corporation-books it appears that the master of Wigston's Hospital had originally the power of recommending, if not the appointment, of the master and ushers; but this right has for nearly a whole century been exercised by the mayor and senior aldermen; sanctioned, however, by the testimonials of learned public characters, which are always a better ground of choice than private opinion.

To those who know that the founder of Wigston's Hospital was a principal founder also of the Free-school, it will not appear strange that the master of that Hospital should have been originally intrusted with some sort of superintendance of this seminary; which should, properly, be visited by the master and confrater; and Mr. Jackson, the last master who resided in Leicester, was a punctual attendant at the stated periods, accompanied generally by the Clergy of the respective parish-churches, and the Mayor of the Town[3], &c. But the master of Wigston's Hospital, in the present times, being no longer a resident, his visiting the School once a-year would be only an useless intrusion.

Within the last dozen years there have not been more than about 50 boys, nor less than about 30.

The following charge occurs in the records of the Corporation:

"A. D. 1618, paid 9th Dec. to watchmen, for watching the School when the scholars were so unruly as to shut out their master, 4*s.* 3*d.*"

Thomas Horne, M. A. of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, 1624, was schoolmaster at London, Leicester, Tunbridge, and at length at Eton, where he succeeded N. Grey; and continuing till his death, Aug. 22, 1654, was buried in the College chapel, Aug. 24[4].

"1627, Mr. John Angel master. He was offered 20*l.* in 1636, if he would resign.

"1647, Nov. 22. Certain orders were made, at a common hall, to be observed by the schoolmaster and scholars of the Free-school.

"1648, Mr. Coleman, under-usher, was discharged the School by the mayor and justices, after being twenty years under-usher.

"1649, Mr. Millis was proposed for master by Mr. Lee; who afterwards wrote to Mr. Bahemeny, that his brother might supply his place.

"1651, Mr. Wood, master, from Croydon. Agreed, at a common hall, that if Mr. Wood would come to the Free-school, and be approved by the mayor and visitors, he should have the school.—Joseph Bickland, under-usher, it appears, was made by the master of the Hospital; and it was asserted by him, that it is the undoubted power of his place to present a schoolmaster.

"1662, Mr. David Thomas, head master, recommended by Mr. Meredith, warden of All Souls, and master of the Hospital.

"1667, Mr. Nathaniel Ball, master, recommended by Dr. Busby, at the mayor's request.

"1670, Joseph Birkhead, M. A. head-schoolmaster, was a benefactor to the Town Library[5].

"1671, Mr. Wells was invited by the mayor and seniors to take the School.

"William Davy, under-usher, to hold during pleasure of the mayor and aldermen who have been mayors.

"1678, Mr. William Thomas, master, elected by a common hall; and his election confirmed by patent, dated Sept. 10, 1680. He continued to be the head-master for 34 years; was 28 years vicar of All Souls; and died Dec. 6, 1713.

"1684, Daniel Keene, M. A. of Jesus college, Cambridge, usher, by the twenty-four.

"1689, Mr. Kilby, head-usher, at a common hall.

"March 16, 1701-2, Joseph Hardy was elected to succeed Mr. Kilby as head-usher.

"On the death of Mr. Thomas, the Rev. John Clayton, some time vicar of St. Nicholas, was elected head-master in 1713.

"Sept. 25, 1713, at a common hall, 3*l.* (the Town's free gift to the under-master) was increased to 8*l.*

"May 14, 1714, Samuel Elly chosen head-usher, in room of Mr. Hardy, who died April 21, 1714. Mr. Elly died June 18, 1734.

"Sept. 27, 1717, Mr. Adcocks, under-usher of the School, was allowed to live in a new house in Senvey gate, at an annual rent of one shilling[6]."

Rev. Gerrard Andrewes, M. A. succeeded Mr. Clayton as head-master of the Free-school in 1739; obtained the vicarage of St. Nicholas in 1757; resigned the school in 1762; and died in 1764. Of this gentleman a particular account, with a Pedigree of his family, and some particulars of the Free-school whilst under his direction, has been given in vol. III. p. 456; but, since that page was printed, the venerable Bp. of London (Dr. Beilby Porteus) has done himself great honour, by presenting, unsolicited, the valuable rectory of St. James, Westminster, to the Rev. Dr. Gerrard Andrewes, the very meritorious son of the late excellent schoolmaster.

The Rev. John Davenport, vicar of St. Nicholas, was elected head-master April 29, 1762; and died Feb. 6, 1769.

The Rev. James Pigott, M. A. was elected head-master Feb. 14, 1769; and resigned in 1799; when

The Rev. Samuel Heyrick, M. A. was elected; who resigned in 1802: and is now rector of Brampton in Northamptonshire.

On Mr. Heyrick's resignation, some of the inhabitants of the town, who were dissatisfied with the mode of education, as being purely classical, remonstrated against the election of a classical master; but after much newspaper altercation, application being made to counsel for an opinion, it was found that the charter would allow no other than a regularly-educated member of either of the Universities to be elected, and that the education given must be principally classical. Of course their remonstrance was withdrawn.

The present head-master, elected in 1802, is the Rev. Henry St. John Bullen, M. A. of Trinity college, Cambridge, and rector of Tuddenham, Suffolk.

The second master is the Rev. R. Davies, B. D. of Queen's college, Oxford, and Vicar of Welton, co. Northampton, and of Llanwnog, co. Montgomery.

CHARITY SCHOOLS IN LEICESTER.

"The first of these was begun by Mr. Stephenson; and continued by his daughter Mrs. Lydia Stephenson, who died in 1720; and after by another daughter, Mrs. Allen. In this school are 24 boys, clothed in grey, having coats, caps, bands, stockings, and shoes [and in 1717 began to have shirts also given them, which continued only one year]; but neither waistcoats nor breeches. From 1711 to 1717 about 29 were apprenticed from this school. The master who teaches them has 8*l. per annum*[1]."

Matthew Simons, esq. about 1714, left 10*l.* 4*s.* for cloathing twelve boys; 1*l.* 16*s.* to buy them Bibles; and 4*l.* a-year for teaching them: they are taught by the under-usher of the Free-school[1].

In 1720, twenty poor boys, belonging to the town of Leicester at large, were taught and cloathed at the charge of the Registrar; and ten poor girls taught and cloathed at the expence of the Commissary[2].

"Another school was founded by Walter Ruding, esq. about 1710, at first for 12 boys, but in 1717 for 16, to be chosen out of any parish. They are found wholly in cloathing; and their outward garment is blue. The master is allowed 6*l. per annum*; and is required to teach them to read and write, and also arithmetic as far as the Rule of Three; for which he receives 10*s.* for each boy, when he goes to be apprenticed, over and above his constant salary. At Christmas Mr. Ruding gives the master, his son, and the boys, a feast; for which he allows 12*d.* each boy, and 12*d* for the master. In about three or four years [this was written in 1717], six of these boys have been apprenticed; for which purpose Mr. Ruding gave with each boy 5*l.*[3]"

"Under the care of Mr. Holbetch, by the charity of an unknown person, are ten boys, of St. Margaret's parish, to whom are given coats, caps, shirts, bands, shoes, stockings, and buckles, and proper books, particularly Common Prayer-books. John Borma the master, who teaches them, has 50*s.* and a coat. If their parents set them out to be apprentices, and they behave themselves well during their apprenticeship, each of them, at his coming out of his time, has 5*l.* given him to begin the world.—N. B. These ten boys began to be taken care of about Midsummer 1716. If their parents can spare them, they may be taught gratis by the under-usher of the Free-school; and therefore the gentleman takes care only for the instruction and good government of them on Sundays, when they are strictly bound to attend the master whom he provides for them, by whom they are taught to read, catechized, and conducted to church, &c.[3]"

St. Margaret's Charity-school.

In the year 1806 was erected, by the unparalleled exertions of the Rev. R. Davies, curate of St. Margaret's, on a piece of ground commonly called The Butt Close[4], in Church-gate, a spacious building, containing two rooms, each competent to accommodate fifty children; one for boys, the other for girls; together with a house at each end for the residence of the master and mistress. The expence of the building was defrayed by the voluntary contributions of the parishioners; to which Mrs. Harris, a lady distinguished for her benefactions to the Charities of Leicester, gave 100*l.*; and at her death bequeathed the interest of 100*l.* more for its support. In this School 100 children are annually taught reading, writing, and accompts; the entire expence of which, together with the cloathing, is supported by voluntary subscription.

Shambles[5], or Green-coat School.

The place now occupied by the charity-boys belonging to the school founded by Alderman Gabriel Newton (who in his life-time had built a school at the North-east corner of St. Nicholas's church-yard) was originally the Shambles. It is situate near St. Nicholas church, facing the Jewry-wall; and on the front of it is inscribed,

[4] The Butt Close, which was purchased from sir Nigel Gresley, has lately been used as a wood-yard; but was formerly given by Queen Elizabeth to the freemen of Leicester, for the purpose of public sports, and especially archery; whence, from the butts, or shooting marks, it received the name. Walk through Leicester, 1804, p. 20.

[5] These Shambles, built in 1682, at the expence of 55*l.* for the use of the Town butchers on the week-day markets, were but for a short time used for that purpose. The other Shambles, a regular-formed building, which stood in the Market-place, having been found to be of no use except on the Saturday, were taken down in 1746, at the erection of the Exchange. The Gainsborough, and some wretched small buildings which were taken down about the same time, were miserably inconvenient.

"This Charity-school for 35 Boys was founded by the Corporation, as Trustees in the late Alderman Gabriel Newton's[1] will, anno 1785."

The boys are clothed in green, with red collars on their coats, a black cap, and are allowed a halfpenny roll for breakfast; they are taught reading, writing, arithmetic, and psalmody[2], and apprenticed with 5*l.* They have two masters, one at a salary of 30*l.* and the other 10*l.* per annum; the latter teaches them to sing, at stated times, and attends them to church, with the other master, on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays[3].

St. Mary's School.

On a line of stone in the front of this edifice, which stands near the church, is inscribed: "A Charity-school, founded and supported by voluntary subscriptions erected 1785;" principally by the inhabitants and congregation at that church; towards which the preacher, the Rev. Mr. Robinson, may be justly said to have done much. On the door a slit, inscribed, "For the benefit of this Charity-school." On a tablet without: "This building, which contains two separate schools, and a dwelling-house for the master's family, was erected by voluntary subscriptions in the year 1785, for the religious education of the children of the poor in this parish, who shall be recommended by the annual subscribers."

Two statues, a boy and a girl, properly habited, stand in niches over the door, thus underwritten: "These figures were erected at the joint expence of John Johnson and John Horton, esqrs. London; both natives of Leicester. By the kindness of our benefactors, we are here instructed in the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation."

In this school 45 boys and 35 girls are educated, not only in reading, &c. but in religious duties; and the girls, moreover, in habits of industry. The children are clothed in light brown, kept exceedingly orderly and clean, and are frequently attended, or rather superintended, by their benefactors. A master and mistress reside. The salary of the former is 39*l.* and the latter 15*l.* a-year. It cost building 600*l.*[4]

St. Martin's School.

This also is a school for the education of the children of the poor belonging to the parish, built and supported by voluntary subscription. The building (which is, doubtless, one of the prettiest ornaments, as a public edifice, in the town) was erected in the year 1791, at the expence of 950*l.* It educates 35 boys, and 30 girls; and stands in Friar-lane, on a healthful spot. Here reside a master and a mistress, in genteel apartments; the former on a salary of 30*l.* and the latter 20*l.* a-year. The former is indulged by the committee to educate with his boys six scholars, for his better maintenance, who are not upon the establishment.

An annual sermon is preached, respectively, for the benefit of St. Mary's and St. Martin's schools. At present they are each without a permanency: it is devoutly to be wished[5].

There is a Sunday-school for each of the Churches of the Established Religion.

There is also a large daily free-school, by subscription, for 20 boys and 20 girls, of any denomination belonging to the Presbyterian or Great Meeting; and a Sunday-school also for 80 scholars.

At the Independent Chapel is a Sunday-school.

The general Baptists have a large Sunday-school, at their Meeting in Friar-lane, carried on upon Mr. Lancaster's improved plan of education.

In the hall and kitchen of the house of Mr. Stephens, in High Cross-street, on a long range of lights, is a regular series of ancient paintings on glass, as delineated, in 1790, at my request, by Mr. Throsby; containing, among other things, the figures of four Saints, and the Seven Sacraments of the Church of Rome[6].

[1] "In this school, Mr. Newton in his life-time had 35 boys clothed in green, with green caps, and fair bands, an halfpenny coarse roll each for breakfast, taught reading, writing, and accompts; and apprenticed with 5*l.* And he intended at his death to provide 5*l.* to enable them, after their service, to launch into business; but was so crossed, maligned, and persecuted, by an ungrateful tribe, that after a few years he broke his charity here, though he promised to do something that way by will, and got me to make proposals to those distant communities who enjoy his charitable establishments. Lincoln disregarded our tender—they were silent; and Mr. Newton would not suffer me to repeat my application, saying they were sorry dogs, and cared not for their poor. He declared, if he had not been maltreated here in his native place, he intended to have endowed it with his whole fortune. It is computed that he left lands and money to the amount of 16,000*l.* for charitable uses. His executors, instead of enforcing the will, by an over-caution searched for his nearest relation; and met with a Richard Walker, a pauper, a member of Trinity Hospital here. Him they produced to Chancery; and acknowledged, though on disputable grounds, as first of kin. I found out the man, and drew up his pretensions; but he, instead of accepting of a pecuniary present, and assisting them to pass a fine, got advice and support, to embarrass them several years. But the will emerged at last in its full force in every respect." W. Bickerstaffe.

LEICESTER INFIRMARY.

The history of this most excellent Institution will with great propriety be prefaced by the Address to which it owed its origin; Dr. Watts, the first projector[1] of the Infirmary, having recommended his benevolent plan in language the most forcible and convincing:

"The great utility of the laborious poor, those supporters of society, upon whom the wealth, upon whom the prosperity, upon whom the defence, upon whom the very existence of the nation, doth so manifestly and mainly depend. The but too obviously disgraceful and fatal neglect of them. The leaving them to the vexatious and distressful consequences of the various deplorable accidents and distempers to which they are so liable; or, what is still far worse, a prey to those ignorant, those interested, to those enterprising, to those utterly unfeeling, intruders upon the Faculty, and depredators upon property and life, who in this Nation (though so happy in its Laws and Government) so grievously abound. The natural and alarming consequences of such unnatural and evident neglect; a numerous sickly, maimed, languishing, and burthensome poor; a weakly offspring; and population decreasing from this, at least as much as from any other single cause. The improbability, not to say, impossibility, of having them taken care of speedily, effectually, comfortably, and cheaply, at home. But the Minister of each parish, and the Gentlemen of the Faculty, can best tell, and let every honest and experienced one testify, the frequent consequences in sufferance, and at length in expence, of even the commonest accidents, whether contusions, or the slightest puncture or cut; especially in depraved habits, in bad situations, and unfavourable seasons; through want of proper, or under (what is still worse) improper care: what foul ulcers, and even foul bones, and stiff joints, thence proceed. Those gentlemen can also best tell, what complicated and radicated distempers arise from, that universal one amongst the poor, worms; or from, that almost as universal one, intermittents, superinduced, amongst other causes, thereby; degenerating into putrid fevers; bringing on jaundice, dropsy, asthma; or terminating in deep-seated abscesses: whence a languishing, hopeless life, and a premature death. Here is no exaggeration; but the too daily experience, alas! affording but too full and melancholy evidence of these.

"Any person, who at all adverts to the state of the laborious poor, cannot but observe how few have houses fit for a bed of sickness, how very few can be attended properly in their habitations, such as they are; being sometimes at great distance from each other, vastly further from the professors of Physic and Surgery, which must make the charge of medicine and attendance utterly insupportable to them; whence, either left to themselves, or falling into unskilful and dishonest hands, they become objects of the most complicated misery and distress. The secondary inducements arise from the manifest and manifold advantages of the many Establishments of this kind, which have in various Counties already taken place: advantages, such to the sick and maimed poor as are indeed not to be had by even persons of fortune in their private families. Those admitted are not only accommodated with every thing necessary or proper for them in their respective conditions; but have such constant and regular attendance of persons thoroughly versed in every branch of Physic; such well-inspected drugs, such appropriate medicines, such

[1] His philanthropic endeavours were, so early as 1766, thus celebrated by the Rev. Mr. Morton, a Northamptonshire Divine:

"WAFT, ye frolic Winds! away
Cowardly Fear, your proper prey:
Secure in such a theme, the Bard
Laughs at each selfish low regard.
The meanest of the Muses' train,
Wishing a Pindar's power in vain,
Dares in so good a cause defy Contempt's rude tongue, and Censure's baleful eye.

"When roll'd the deep-mouth'd Bard along,
The tide of dithyrambick song,
While all the echoing world around
The double mount reflects the sound;
What was the elevating deed
Crown'd with this immortal meed
Did feats of strength or skill well done,
On the athletic dusty plain,
The race by Theron or by Hiero won Engross th' inimitable strain?
Instant breaking from his chain,
Nobly sung the Theban Swan,
The Patriot, Legislator, Friend of Man:
Watts! could I equal Pindar's lays,
As equal is thy worth, equal should be thy praise.

"Ambition! execrable name!
Back to the Hell, from whence you came:
Perish the wreath, tho' all the Nine
Conspire th' ill-fated flowers to twine,
Perish the Bard, who strives, in Virtue's spite,
To deck the foes of Man, the fiends of night,
With ornaments the Muses meant to grace
The friends, the guardian angels of the human race.

"This wise benevolent design,
Envy, tho' ever basely prone
To damn the noblest projects not her own,
Dares not openly malign,
Hardly in secret undermine.
Prejudice, whose jaundic'd sight
With her own yellow tinges fair and white,
Is forc'd to say she sees aright.
Ridicule forbears his jest;
Goodness, like Truth, will stand his test.
Avarice with seeming warmth must now expand
The long-contracted heart and hand:
Miscreants like these must now controul
Their native narrowness of soul;
Miscreants like these must feign they feel,
Too feeble to oppose concurrent hearty zeal.

"Muse! tell each churlish harden'd elf,
Who feels for none besides himself;
Whose heart has never learnt to glow
'At others good, or melt at others woe;'
Tell them, that the liberal Arts
Have never civiliz'd their better parts:
Nor could — the heart that 's made of rock
Is still companion to a head,
Made of thicker, heavier lead,
That Culture's every art will mock:
Incapable of being grac'd,
Either with sentiment or taste,
Nor Muse nor Grace can work on such a block.
Muse! tell the churls, that, vers'd in Nature's school,
You ever found a churl a blockhead and a fool.

"Gods! shall a wretch, insulting common sense,
Make to Nobility pretence,
Who wants humanity:
Less than a Man a Noble must he be!
In vain his head a mitre wears,
Whose heart no human impress bears;
Less than a Lay-plebeian he!
Titles nor coronets impart
The patent of a noble heart.
Not Granby's high illustrious birth;
Not Granby's courage, proves the man of worth:
Was not a Granby, like the truly brave,
Tho' pleas'd to conquer, better pleas'd to save.

"The wounds of Poverty to heal,
Which oft the undeserving feel;
To save her, in a dangerous hour,
From an Empirick's fatal power;
To make to her those blessings known,
Enjoy'd before by Wealth alone;
While Assiduity and Art,
With Tenderness, act each their part,
To mitigate the boiling ire
Of Fever's unremitting fire;
To make the pale and quiv'ring lip
The Soul-recalling cordial sip:
To stop th' involuntary groan,
Extorted by the tort'ring stone;
Bid Bloom and Vigour once more seek
The feeble limb and faded cheek;
To make the lame 'his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the roe,'
To ease the ideal widow's fear,
Prevent the future orphan's tear:
And thus by pious alms conduce
To private good and public use.
Say ye of sentimental kind,
Is it not luxury of mind such exact diet, such experienced nurses and assistants; such convenience of external applications, as of hot and cold baths, pumpings, sweating-chairs, and other collateral aids; that it must be an happy combination of circumstances, indeed, under which persons of wealth and distinction themselves can be so assisted.

"The advantages to the community in prompt relief, speedy and radical cures, whereby so very many are kept from being long a load alike to society and themselves; which advantages are so very conspicuous, where men with minds open to conviction attend duly thereto; and result indeed so immediately from the above, that it would be impertinent to specify them here. The result of a proper enquiry into the state of the sick and maimed poor, how very greatly they stand in need of, and how very highly they deserve, better care; the result of an enquiry into the nature and obligations of our duty to them, and therein to the universal Lord: The result of an enquiry into the manner wherein the most consolatory, the most efficacious, the most endearing, at the same time the least expensive assistance, can be given, will, I doubt not, be, that a Public Infirmary, not only in this, but in every County, is required. Whether the voice of the most œconomical polity, the voice of reason, of humanity, of religion, be heard, each loudly declareth, that the most adequate relief of the distressed, to the disburdening the parishes, to the credit of the nation, to the credit of this Province, to the credit of each individual Subscriber, to the endearing the rich to the poor; to the glory of that unspeakably great and good Being, who delighteth in mercy, and to the obtaining that mercy pronounced upon the merciful, of which not only the Nation in general, but each individual, so very greatly standeth in need.

"Much more might certainly be added concerning the expediency and necessity of an institution in every view agreeable to the dignity of the County, and for the public good. But the lives and limbs of those tillers of our fields, by the sweat of whose brow we break bread; the lives and limbs of those soldiers and sailors, who are at once the intrepid assertors of our liberty, and that of mankind; the ease and relief of our compatriots and comprovincials, of those our fellow-sufferers who have truly the post of honour in this life of manly trial here below, and are heirs of the same sure and immortal hope: Motives these so exceedingly interesting and important, the great characteristic of the Nation so prevalent also and diffused, that it would be an insult to enlarge. Only be it permitted to add, that I write in the fullest and most experimental persuasion of the necessity of what I have undertaken to recommend; that I nevertheless most heartily wish the affair was in abler hands; that I am too well acquainted with my station to presume, and with the rights of mankind, whatever were my station, to pretend to dictate, in a matter of so general and weighty concern.

"If, either in virtue of any personal experience, or of the materials which I have collected, or of the assistance wherewith I am favoured, I can in any shape serve the community, and that (I hope evidently) without any the least interested intent, I shall have a great additional cause to bless and praise that good God, under whom I submit this to all to whom it any way relateth, and principally to those who in their exalted station may, through the divine influence, best promote and bring it speedily to good effect. I would hope, that it will not appear assuming or presumptuous in me, that, in the humble duties of mine, I endeavour thus to render myself an useful (being very truly an affectionate) servant of the Community in general, and of my native County in particular.
W. WATTS, M.D."

Dr. Watts, whose family resided at Danet's Hall near Leicester, was educated for a Physician; and afterwards entered into holy orders, but obtained no considerable preferment in the Church. With a slender fortune, he lived usefully; and died, an honour to his family and friends, Dec. 17, 1786, aged 61[1].

More rich, exalted, and refin'd,
Than sense, than wealth, the world can give?
And does there such a worldling live?
Who would not, for this pleasure's sake,
A friend of the unrighteous Mammon make,
Could you admit the cruel curse,
Wish your worst foe his heart; you cannot wish him worse.

"This is the truly Golden use of pelf,
The loan the universal Lord
Deigns to own, and to reward
As lent unto himself:
These the first fruits that sanctify the whole,
Of a dead mass the vital soul.
Should, ye Benevolent, in evil day,
Should Riches take their wings, and fly away,
Tho' thus by virtuous Violence bound to stay:
Hence will Reflection's conscious power
Strike out the most enliv'ning ray,
To cheer that sad and gloomy hour.
Should Riches stay — Disease and Pain assail;
These, when Physic's power shall fail,
These will make your sickly bed,
These support your drooping head,
These the cordial influence shed.
As grateful and refreshing found,
As dews distilling on the thirsty ground.
And when Death, who summons all,
Shall give the rich the common call;
These, ere your Spirit breaks away
From its frail tenement of clay,
At Heav'n's Tribunal shall appear,
To plead your cause, and prove your ablest patron there.

"Hail, Charity! whom Pity bore
Unto Humanity in days of yore.
No sooner true Religion came,
Than to the venerable dame
Her beauty and her worth was known;
Strait she adopts her for her own,
And christens her Benevolence.
Now thro' her lore to full perfection grown,
Her matchless merit to proclaim,
And give her just pre-eminence;
She owns her of more worth possess'd,
Than the two Sisters* she had given birth, *Faith and Hope.
And nourish'd at her breast,
Tho' they were Heav'nly-born — she sprang from earth.
'Tis her's, on Nature's noblest plan,
In sympathetic bands to bind
The universal human kind,
Making a Brother of the Man:
Her heart still prompt at wretchedness to grieve,
And her hand still extended to relieve;
The doing good her sole employ,
Her meat and drink, and only joy.
Nature's dissolution past,
When her two Sisters shall have breath'd their last,
She, snatch'd from Earth's annihilated frame,
Shall gain that Heaven from whence they came;
And dwell for ever with the blest above,
In happiness as boundless as her love.
Oh Britain! Oh my Country! need I tell,
That 't is with thee this Fair delights to dwell.
Where she beholds Love's labour thrive so well:
While in this her dear retreat
She sees her thousand structures rise,
Grandly useful, simply great:
Not Heaven's own structures shine more fair in Heav'n's own eyes.

"Britain! 't is to her you owe
All the good that you enjoy;
'T is thro' her, you do not know
Any ill that would destroy.
Cherish the precious guest, nor drive her hence;
Not your own rocks or fleets so sure defence.
Then may, O WATTS, thy plan of perfect love,
Like the stirr'd waters' circles still expand,
O'er district and o'er district move,
Till it encompass all the land.
So Britain! give your Patroness to plead
A good against each guilty deed.
So may she hide the multitude of crimes
Born in these flagitious times;
So may the vengeful ministers of death
Harmless, tho' furious, sit at her command;
Black Pestilence restrain his blasting breath,
Pale Famine hold his blighting hand.
So may no elements, in earth's dark womb,
Be e'er permitted to engage
With sulphureous devouring rage,
Your living Sons and Cities to entomb;
But Industry, with chearful smiles,
Reap the reward of all her toils;
While laugh your Vales with golden grain,
And Commerce whitens all the liquid plain.
Still more than conquerors in foreign wars,
So may you triumph still o'er feudal jars;
Still see your sails to willing winds unfurl'd,
Ride o'er the willing waves, and rule the watery world."

The Infirmary stands within the limits of St. Mary's parish, at the extremity of the Southern part of the Town, on the site of the old chapel of St. Sepulchre; and is represented in Plate XXXII. in two points of view. It is erected upon a plan, which, for its convenience and utility, received the approbation of the great Howard, whose experience and observation qualified him for a competent judge; and is calculated to admit, exclusive of the fever ward, 54 patients, without restriction to county or nation; and was opened in 1771 for the reception of patients, sick and lame, from any country. The building is plain and neat, with two wings, fronted by a garden, the entrance to which is ornamented with a very handsome iron gate, the gift of the late truly benevolent Shukburgh Ashby, esq. of Quenby.

A two-handed pump on the back near the house forces water to the top of the Infirmary into a reservoir, containing 60 hogsheads, which supplies every ward. Another pump in the wash-house supplies the bath.

The following are some of the names of the noblemen and gentlemen who were the earliest and chief benefactors to the Infirmary: Shukburgh Ashby, esq. 300*l.*; Joseph Cradock, esq. of Leicester, 100*l.*; sir Wolstan Dixie, bart. 100*l.*; John Darker, esq. 300*l.*; Charles Jennens, esq. 100*l.*; Anthony James Keck, esq. 300*l.*; and 500*l.* left to him by his mother to be disposed of to charitable uses; sir John Palmer, bart. 300*l.*; Charles-James Packe, esq. 100*l.*; sir George Robinson, 100*l.*—Annual sums: Joseph Bunney, esq. 10*l.* 10*s.*; sir Thomas Cave, bart. 10*l.* 10*s.*; Joseph Cradock, esq. of Gumley, 10*l.* 10*s.*; right hon. the earl of Denbigh, 21*l.*; right hon. the countess of Denbigh, 10*l.* 10*s.*; right hon. the earl of Huntingdon, 20*l.*; Charles Jennens, esq. 10*l.* 10*s.*; his grace the duke of Montague, 20*l.*; right hon. lady Maynard, 10*l.* 10*s.*; Samuel Phillipps, esq. 10*l.* 10*s.* and a gift of 50*l.*; Henry Palmer, 10*l.* 10*s.*; right hon. the earl of Stamford, 20*l.*; right hon. lord viscount Wentworth, 15*l.* 15*s.*; Mrs. M. Wigley, 10*l.* 10*s.*; and Mrs. Anne Wigley, 50*l.* and 2*l.* 2*s.* per annum, &c.

The Officers appointed at or soon after the establishment of this House were; President, his Grace the Duke of Montague; Vice-presidents, the Earls of Huntingdon, Stamford, and Harborough; Lords Viscount Wentworth and Maynard [1]; Visitor, the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Lincoln; Physicians, Drs. Vaughan and Arnold; Treasurer, Joseph Bunney, esq.; Auditors, Samuel Oliver and Henry Coleman, Esquires.

The surgeons of Leicester attend in weekly rotation.

The following statutes and rules for the government of the Infirmary were compiled by Dr. Vaughan; who received the thanks of the first general meeting of the subscribers in terms the most flattering and honourable.

I. The building known by the name of the Infirmary, with the close and garden adjoining, shall be vested, as a trust, in a certain number of gentlemen, conformable to the directions of the late Lord Chancellor Yorke; who shall likewise be governors of the same.

II. All subscribers of two guineas or more annually shall be governors during payment; and all benefactors of 50*l.* or more, at one time, shall be also governors during life.

III. From the list of governors shall be chosen the following great officers, who are to remain so for life, or as long as they continue subscribers; a president, vice-president, and a visitor; to whose inspection every transaction respecting the Infirmary shall at all times be open; and each of whom shall be empowered to call a special meeting, so often as to them shall appear necessary; observing the form directed in the 15th statute.

IV. A general board of governors shall be held at four stated times every year; viz. on the Thursday preceding the 24th of June, which is to be considered as the principal annual meeting; on the Thursdays preceding the 29th of September, the 25th of December, and the 25th of March; or oftener on special occasions.

V. The power of making and repealing laws, and of electing or removing officers, shall be vested in the general board only.

VI. There shall be a weekly committee, or board of governors, consisting of five at least, who are to meet every Tuesday, by 11 o'clock, at the Infirmary.

VII. At the general board held next before Midsummer, a treasurer shall be annually chosen out of the governors, who shall give security, to such persons as the general board shall appoint, for the due accounting for all such money as he shall receive for the use of the Infirmary; and shall pay all such bills as are ordered by the general or weekly board, such order being first signed by the secretary.

VIII. The treasurer, at every weekly board, is to take the chair; or, in his absence, a chairman shall be appointed by the members then present; who shall have a casting vote. And at every general board the proceedings of the former, and at every weekly board the proceedings of the last weekly board, shall be read over; and all laws and orders made at one general board shall be in force until the next general board, but no longer, unless confirmed by two-thirds of the governors present at such subsequent general board; and all orders of the weekly committee are to continue in force till repealed by some subsequent weekly or general board.

IX. The proceedings of every board shall be fairly registered, and signed by the chairman.

X. At the general board held next before Midsummer, two auditors shall be chosen from the governors, to inspect and audit the accompts of the Infirmary, and to report, from time to time, to the general board; and at the end of every year, viz. at Midsummer, shall draw out the accompts of the charity, calling to their aid such assistance as may be necessary. They shall also state the number of patients received and discharged in the year, and give an abstract of the proceedings of the governors, and shall report the same to the general board.

XI. One or more of the contributors residing in town shall be appointed, in the order they stand in the alphabetical list, at every weekly board, to visit the house once every day for the ensuing week, each of which, in case of sickness or necessary avocation, may appoint another contributor to be his deputy. When visiting, they shall enquire whether the rules concerning officers, servants, and patients, have been observed; whether prayers have been duly read; whether the patients and servants have been guilty of swearing, drunkenness, or any immorality or indecency; whether the provisions are good, and whether they have been carried out of the house, or brought into the patients, clandestinely; and they are to enter what they think proper to be observed in a book provided for that purpose, and shall attend the next weekly board.

XII. An apothecary, secretary, and matron, shall be appointed by the general board, and such nurses and servants as are necessary to attend the Infirmary, after the first appointment by the weekly board.

XIII. An apothecary shall from time to time inspect the shop, and see that the medicines are properly compounded, and good in their kind, who shall be called the visiting apothecary.

XIV. The weekly board shall inspect the observations of the house visitors, regulate all matters relating to the admission and discharge of patients (subjecting nevertheless the admission of them to the determination of the physicians, who are the only judges how far the case of a patient renders him proper for an in or out-patient, or whether he should be admitted a patient in any respect); they shall enquire into the conduct of officers and servants, examine and pass accompts, order payments, execute the orders of the general board, and prepare such matters as are proper to be laid before the same.

XV. When a vacancy shall happen in any of the offices, or in the place of apothecary, secretary, or matron, the weekly board shall summon a general board to fill up the vacancy, unless the stated general board shall happen at a convenient distance of time; and, till such election be made, the weekly board shall appoint a person or persons to act in the vacant office.

[1] See p. 522.

XVI. The weekly board, seven members being present, shall have power to summon a general board, upon any special occasion, giving public notice, fourteen days at the least, and specifying the business to be transacted at such meeting in the Leicester Journal.

XVII. All elections, if contested, shall be by ballot, and all questions decided by a majority of votes present, which shall be taken by ballot if required; but no subscriber shall have a vote at any general board, unless he has subscribed one year, and paid his second year's subscription.

XVIII. All subscriptions for the current year shall be paid as soon as may be after the year commences; and all subscriptions entered before Michaelmas shall be deemed to commence at the preceding Midsummer; and all subsequent subscriptions are to commence from the quarter-day preceding the time of subscribing, unless the subscriber desires otherwise.

XIX. The secretary shall send a monitory letter to all persons whose subscriptions are three months in arrears, to prevent further delay of payment; all subscriptions being supposed to continue, unless the subscriber orders the contrary by letter.

XX. No physician, surgeon, treasurer, or auditor, shall receive any reward, salary, or gratuity, from the Infirmary for his service.

XXI. No patient, or person related to the Infirmary, shall at any time presume, on pain of expulsion, to give or take from any tradesman, patient, servant, stranger, or other person whatsoever, any fee, reward, or gratuity, directly or indirectly, for any service done, or to be done, on account of the Infirmary.

XXII. A Table of Rules and Orders relating to the conduct of patients and servants shall be hung up in each ward, and publicly read over every Wednesday morning by a person to be appointed by the matron.

XXIII. An inventory of all the household goods and furniture belonging to the Infirmary shall be kept by the secretary, and a copy thereof by the matron; and once every year, at some convenient time, before the stated board in June, the auditors shall cause a fresh inventory to be made, and compared with that of the preceding year, as well as with the account of what has been purchased since; and, as often as any thing be wanted, it shall be immediately notified by the matron to the visitor of the week.

XXIV. The method of dealing with tradesmen in general shall be to publish an account of the provisions and goods wanted; for such as are willing to furnish the same to bring their proposals, sealed up, to the secretary, at a day fixed, in order that the next weekly board may determine which shall be accepted.

XXV. The appointment of the particular diet of the patients shall be under the regulation of their respective physician or surgeon; and no other provisions or liquors shall be brought into the house to them, on any pretence whatsoever.

XXVI. A poor's box or boxes shall be set up in some convenient place or places, to each of which there shall be two locks; one key to be kept by the treasurer, and the other as the weekly board shall direct; and the money therein collected applied to the use of the Infirmary.

XXVII. The matron and servants shall be ready to attend the visitor in the board-room; and when the visitor enters the wards, the matron and servants are to withdraw, and the patients to stand by their respective beds.

XXVIII. All deeds, evidences, and writing, relative to the Infirmary, or, where the originals cannot be obtained, attested copies thereof, shall be preserved in a chest provided for that purpose, and secured by three locks; and the keys shall be kept by such persons as shall be appointed by the general board held at Midsummer.

XXIX. No repeal, addition, or alteration, in any of the statutes shall take place, excepting at the quarterly meeting of the governors in June, 21 or more being present, two-thirds of which must vote for such repeal, addition, or alteration.

Rules for the admission and discharge of Patients.

I. The patients shall be admitted and discharged every Tuesday, by the committee, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock; and none shall be admitted after 12, except on some extraordinary occasions, as the committee will be then adjourned.

II. If, by accident, or some unforeseen cause, a sufficient number of governors do not meet on the day of appointment for the admission of patients, the physician and surgeon of the week shall then discharge such patients as are ready to be discharged, and admit such patients as shall then offer themselves and be approved of.

III. The head or other officer for the time being of any body corporate, township, parish, or society, subscribing to the Infirmary, shall have the same power of recommending patients with a subscriber of equal value.

IV. Every subscriber shall have the power of deputing another subscriber to recommend patients in his absence, observing the form directed in the Supplement.

V. No patient shall be admitted but by the recommendation of a subscriber or benefactor, unless in cases which admit of no delay; in which cases the apothecary and matron may receive patients, giving immediate notice to the physician and surgeon of the week.

VI. No subscriber's recommendation shall be accepted whilst his subscription is in arrear; nor any governor's vote permitted, until his subscription and arrears are paid.

VII. Every subscriber of a guinea annually, or benefactor of 10 guineas, shall have a power of recommending either three out-patients annually, or one in-patient.

VIII. Every subscriber of 20 guineas at any one time, or two guineas annually, shall have the privilege of recommending two in-patients and two out-patients annually, having no more than one in-patient in the house at a time; and so in proportion for every increased subscription, up to five guineas per annum.

IX. Every subscriber of five guineas per annum, or 100*l.* in benefaction, shall have the power of sending any number of patients annually; but shall not have more than two at any time in the house.

X. No persons shall be admitted who are able to subsist themselves, and pay for their cure; and no one shall be admitted, or suffered to remain as an in-patient, who is capable of receiving equal benefit as an out-patient.

XI. An alphabetical list of all subscribers in arrear shall be made out by the secretary, and laid before the chairman of the committee at the end of every quarter, that he may immediately refer to any person's name whose subscription is unpaid.

XII. No domestic servant, or other, shall merely on that account be excluded the benefit of the Infirmary, but it shall be left to the determination of the committee, how far the servant recommended is or is not a proper object; which committee will also consider, that it is contrary to the intention of this charity to relieve those who are able to pay for relief; and it is reasonable to suppose, that all masters (whether subscribers or not) who are in affluent circumstances, and have hitherto been accustomed to pay for their servants, will not desire them to be relieved at the public expence, to the detriment of more necessitous objects, and to the disadvantage of the surgeons who give their attendance gratis.

XIII. A letter signed by the chairman, and countersigned by the secretary, shall be sent to every subscriber recommending a patient, to signify that the person recommended is admitted, postponed, or rejected; and the like notice shall be given to the subscriber or benefactor when a patient is discharged.

XIV. Those who recommend patients from distant places are desired to send a short state of the case, drawn up by some physician, surgeon, or apothecary (post-paid); to which an answer shall be returned, whether, and when, they shall be admitted; but the committee is at full liberty to reject such patients, if the case appears to have been misrepresented; nor will any answer be sent to a letter of which the postage or carriage is not paid.

XV. When there shall be want of room in the Infirmary for the admission of such as are properly recommended, and qualified to be in-patients, the preference, in cases of equal exigency, shall be given,

1. To those who live at the greatest distance.
2. To those recommended by such subscribers and benefactors as have not recommended any in-patients within the year. And,
3. To those recommended by the largest contributors.

XVI. Patients properly recommended and qualified, who cannot be admitted for want of room in the Infirmary, shall be entered in the books as in-patients, and received into the house, before any other in equal necessity, upon the first vacancy; and in the mean time shall be treated as out-patients.

XVII. One bed in each ward shall be reserved, as a provision for such accidents as require immediate relief, and for such medical cases as will admit of no delay.

XVIII. No soldier shall be admitted an in-patient until his officer has engaged to pay his subsistence-money to the committee, during such time as he shall continue there; except a soldier on furlough, when there is no officer at hand to engage for him.

XIX. All such as are admitted into the Infirmary, and in two months receive no benefit, shall of course be discharged; unless the physicians and surgeons certify to the committee, that there is a probability of a cure, or of considerable relief.

XX. No woman big with child; no child under six years of age, except in extraordinary cases, as fractures, or where cutting for the stone, or any other operation, is required; no persons disordered in their senses, suspected to have the small-pox, itch, or other infectious distemper, or that are apprehended to be in a dying condition, or incurable, be admitted as in-patients; or, if inadvertently admitted, be suffered to continue.

XXI. The several patients shall be enjoined to desire that public prayers may be offered for them during their illness, and return public thanks, in their respective places of worship, upon their recovery.

XXII. It is expected that any person, parish, or society, who shall recommend a patient, do take care that he comes with a change of linen; cleanliness, as far as is consistent with circumstances, being necessary to be carefully observed.

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

I. The physician, with the surgeon whose turn it is to attend, shall meet at the Infirmary every Friday morning at ten o'clock, and consult upon such cases as may require it; after which they will prescribe for such out-patients as they had ordered on the preceding Tuesday then to attend them, and will give a list to the apothecary of such patients as are proper to be discharged the Saturday following; they are also to visit their respective patients, at such other times as they judge necessary, or shall have notice of such necessity from the apothecary.

II. The physicians shall be constantly referred to in all difficult and mixed cases by the surgeons, and shall jointly consult with him; but no internal medicine shall be administered by the surgeons, or dispensed to them by the house apothecary, but by the direction of the physician, unless on casualties, when patients are suddenly brought into the Infirmary, or where a chirurgical case instantly requires the administration of internal medicines, and at a time when the physician cannot conveniently be consulted.

Rules for the Surgeons.

I. The surgeons shall attend by weekly rotation every Tuesday morning, from 11 to 12 o'clock; that is, during the time the physician continues to admit the patients.

II. Each surgeon, during the time of his attendance, shall dress those daily that require it; appointing a certain hour in the forenoon for the attendance of the out-patients at the infirmary; and no out-patient shall be dressed who is not at the Infirmary by that hour.

III. No amputation, or any other principal operation, shall be performed in the Infirmary, without a previous consultation of the physician, and all the surgeons belonging to it, except on some sudden accident, the physician and other surgeons being out of town.

IV. Each surgeon shall be allowed to introduce any number of articled apprentices or pupils, first giving in their names to the quarterly or special board, and having them entered in their minutes, with permission to attend at the Infirmary; but no pupils or apprentices are to dress the patients, but under the direction of one of the surgeons; nor are the surgeons to suffer such pupils or apprentices to perform any operation, except bleeding, cutting an issue, making a seaton, or drawing a tooth.

V. None shall be admitted, except the physicians and his pupils, the surgeons' apprentices and pupils, with the apothecary and his apprentice, to see either the great operations, or common proceedings of the surgeons, without their approbation.

VI. Each surgeon, whose business or indisposition shall oblige him to be absent, shall engage some one of the other surgeons to inspect the proceedings, that the patients may not be left to the sole management of the pupils and apprentices.

VII. The surgeons appointed to attend the Infirmary shall have the same privileges with a subscriber of two guineas per annum.

Rules for the Apothecary.

I. The apothecary shall fix two tickets on each patient's bed; one specifying the name of the patient, together with that of the physician or surgeon, or both, if the cure be partly medical, and partly chirurgical, and the other the diet according to the prescription of the physician; and he shall take care that the cases so fixed exactly correspond with the physician's book, and shall give a list to the matron thereof on each prescribing day.

II. He shall keep a diet-book of the number of patients on each diet, according to the expences in the book of the physician.

III. He shall make a report, to the weekly board or committee, of any patients who shall have been received into the Infirmary during the foregoing week, and shall deliver a list of such patients as have been in the Infirmary two months.

IV. He shall go into the wards every morning, and enquire into the respective state of the patients' healths; whether the medicines prescribed have been taken, what effect they have had; and shall make a report of whatever may be necessary to the physician.

V. An account of the number of beds which become vacant in each ward, shall be delivered by him at the weekly board, with a list of the patients received into the house in the foregoing week, and of such patients as have been in the house two months.

VI. He shall dispense no medicines without the direction of the physician, except in cases of necessity, when they cannot be consulted.

VII. He shall not suffer any apothecary, or others, to inspect the physician's book, or Pharmacopœia, without leave first obtained from the physician himself.

VIII. There shall be a committee appointed, whenever the general board shall judge it convenient, to buy drugs for the use of the Infirmary; and till such time the apothecary shall provide what is necessary, by the direction of the physician; and he shall deliver to the weekly board an account of what drugs and medicines are expended, and shall bring in a bill of the expence once every month.

IX. On a supposition any medicine shall be wanted for immediate use, the apothecary shall pay ready money for such medicine; and if any apothecary in the town should, from a deficiency of any particular medicine, desire a supply from the Infirmary for his immediate use, such apothecary shall in like manner pay ready money for it; but no borrowing or lending of drugs shall on any pretence be admitted.

X. The apothecary shall never be absent when the physician and surgeons are to attend, and shall always leave notice with the matron where he is to be found; and in case of sickness, or other necessary avocation, he shall depute another apothecary, who shall be approved by the physician, to officiate in his place.

XI. The salary of the house-apothecary shall be 25*l.* a-year, with a gratuity of 5*l.* a-year, provided he stays 12 months complete, and behaves to the satisfaction of the governors, but not else. He shall have his diet, washing, and lodging, at the Infirmary; and shall also have the privilege of taking a pupil, and money for his instruction, provided such pupil resides out of the Infirmary: the apothecary shall also have the liberty of taking an apprentice, to be maintained at the expence of the charity, but not without the particular favour and appointment of the governors, assembled at a general or special board; nor shall the apothecary ever be permitted to have both an apprentice and pupil at the same time.

XII. Whenever the apothecary shall chuse to quit his place, he shall give three months notice, at a quarterly meeting, of such his intention.

XIII. The house-apothecary shall not administer any medicines, nor act in his profession, out of the Infirmary.

Rules for the Matron.

I. The matron shall take care of the houshold goods and furniture according to the inventory, and be ready to give an account thereof when required.

II. She shall visit the wards and offices every day, and shall take care that the chambers, beds, cloths, linen, and all things within the Infirmary, be kept clean.

III. She shall weigh and measure the provisions and other necessaries which are brought to the Infirmary, and shall keep a daily account of them in the check-book, and lay it before the weekly committee every Tuesday; and shall never suffer any of the provisions, utensils, or goods, to be carried out of the house.

IV. She shall keep a diet-book, by which the number of patients on each diet may be known.

V. She shall cause the names of the patients in each ward to be called over every morning and evening, and enter into the house-visitor's book the names of those who are absent, and shall suffer no in-patient to go further than the gravel-walk without leave.

VI. She shall take care of the keys of the doors, and see they be always locked by nine in the evening from Michaelmas to Lady-day, and at ten in the evening from Lady-day to Michaelmas.

VII. She shall see that the nurses, servants, and patients, do observe the rules of the house, and do their duty; and, in case of misbehaviour or neglect, acquaint the weekly board or house-visitors thereof.

Rules for the Secretary.

I. The secretary shall attend every weekly, quarterly, and special board, to minute down and register all proceedings; and he shall be always ready to produce the books and accompts of the society, fairly written.

II. He shall enter, in a Register to be kept for the purpose, the names of the in-patients and of the out-patients, the parish or township they belong to, their age and distemper, when admitted, when discharged, and in what state.

III. He shall give notice, in writing, every Saturday preceding the commencement of the attendance, to the surgeon whose turn it is to visit the sick; as also to the house-visitor, who is to visit the following week.

IV. He shall not presume to divulge the proceedings of the governors, or report any thing which may be said in relation to tradesmen, and others, under pain of immediate dismission.

Rules for the Porter.

I. The porter shall carefully attend the gate, and shall suffer no in-patient to go out without leave; and he shall inform the matron of every stranger who comes into the Infirmary.

II. He shall obey the orders of the physicians, surgeon, and apothecary, pound in the great mortar, and do the labouring work of the house, when ordered by the apothecary or matron; and shall never be absent on any business whatsoever, without giving the matron notice, that the laboratory-man, or one of the patients, may be appointed to attend the door during his absence.

Rule for the Messenger and Laboratory-man.

A strong lad shall be hired as an assistant in the laboratory, and to go occasionally on errands, and to do such other business in the house as the apothecary or matron may require.

Rules for the Nurses and Servants.

I. The nurses shall clean their respective wards by seven in the morning, from the 1st of April to the 1st of October; and before eight, from the 1st of October to the 1st of April.

II. The nurses and servants shall obey the house-apothecary as their master, and the matron as their mistress; and shall behave with tenderness to the patients, and with civility and respect to strangers.

III. All persons concerned as servants in the house shall be free from the burden of children, and the care of a family.

Rules for the In-patients.

I. No patient shall go out of the Infirmary without leave from the physician or surgeon, first signified to the matron, or lie out of the house on any account whatsoever, on pain of expulsion.

II. No men-patients shall go into the women's ward, nor any women-patients into the men's, or be permitted to go into any ward but their own, without leave of the matron.

III. No in-patient shall sit up after eight o'clock in the winter, or after nine o'clock in the summer, unless the matron should on any particular occasion direct otherwise; and every one, unless such as are ordered to the contrary by the physician and surgeon, shall rise by seven in the summer, and by eight in the winter.

IV. There shall be no swearing, cursing, rude or indecent behaviour, on pain of expulsion after the first admonition.

V. No patient shall presume to play at cards, dice, or any other game, on any account whatsoever, within the limits of the Infirmary; nor to smoak any where within doors, without leave from the physician or surgeon first signified to the matron.

VI. Such patients as are able shall be employed in nursing the other patients, washing and ironing the linen, cleaning the wards, and such other service as the matron shall require; the apothecary being first asked, whether such employment is likely to interfere with the medicines prescribed.

VII. Such in-patients as are able are expected to attend divine service in the Infirmary on Sundays, and at all times when it shall be administered; and no stranger or others shall be permitted to see the Infirmary on that day, nor shall the patients be visited without special leave of the matron (which she is not to grant but on extraordinary occasions), viz. to the friends of those patients who live at a great distance, and cannot conveniently come on any other day.

VIII. None who shall have been discharged for irregularity shall be admitted again as patients of the Infirmary, on any recommendation whatsoever, unless some very extraordinary case, or where they have met with an accident which requires immediate assistance.

IX. These rules for the patients, and those for the nurses, shall be read every Monday evening, after the admission of the new patients, by the apothecary in the men's ward, and by the matron in the women's ward.

Rules for the Out-patients.

I. The out-patients shall be assisted with advice and medicines; and be in no other respect chargeable to the society, except occasionally for trusses, which are to be returned, and in the article of cloth, proper for straight or laced stockings, which shall be made up for them, under the direction of the surgeons, by some of the in-patients, provided they are not capable of doing it properly for themselves.

II. No fresh medicines shall be given them until they deliver to the apothecary, his pupil or apprentice, the phials or gallipots, and such medicines as they have not taken.

III. They shall attend exactly at eleven o'clock every Friday, and at such other times as shall be appointed by the physician and surgeons; and if they absent themselves twice together, without a reasonable cause, allowed to be so by their physician or surgeon, they shall be discharged for non-attendance.

IV. No out-patient shall presume to loiter about the Infirmary, or streets adjacent, but come immediately to the place appointed to receive them; nor are they to beg any where in the town, on pain of being discharged for misbehaviour.

Printed Notice to be given to every Out-patient.

Leicester Infirmary.

You are ordered to attend at the Infirmary every Friday, at 11 o'clock precisely, and no other time, unless something extraordinary seems to render the physician's more frequent advice necessary; in which case you must first apply to the house apothecary.—Take notice, that if you twice neglect attending your physician on the day and at the hour appointed, without particular leave from him, you will be discharged for non-attendance, and not admitted on a future occasion.

N. B. All the out-patients are ordered to bring back every week to the apothecary, his pupil, or apprentice, whatever medicines they have left, together with the bottles, phials, gallipots, and the trusses they receive from him. Whoever neglects this order will have no more medicines.

Such of the out-patients as are under the care of the surgeons are to attend at the Infirmary at the hour appointed by their surgeon.

Directions for the House-visitor.

I. The Infirmary is to be visited by the house-visitor once every day, for the week after his appointment; when he is to walk through the wards, with a white wand in his hand, that he may be known to be the house-visitor; and as soon as he enters the wards the nurses are to withdraw, and the patients to stand by the sides of their respective beds.

II. He shall then enquire whether the apothecary, matron, nurses, and servants, have behaved agreeably to the rules of the society; particularly whether the patients have been duly attended, and their medicines dispensed to them without delay; whether any thing has been carried out of or brought into the Infirmary clandestinely by the friends of the patients, or by any of the servants; as well as any other questions he may think necessary.

III. He shall view the meat and provisions brought into the house, and see that the malt-liquor is sound, and in every respect proper for the family.

IV. On his return from visiting the wards, the apothecary, matron, nurses, and servants, shall be ready to attend him in the governor's room, to answer all his questions, and execute his orders; and whatever he thinks observable shall be entered either by himself or by the apothecary, and signed by him, in a book provided for that purpose, which is to be examined every week by the committee.

Directions for the Chairman and the Committee.

I. To nominate the chairman of the day in the absence of the treasurer, who, when present, is always chairman, conformable to the statutes.

II. To enter the names of the governors then present in the minute-book.

III. To read the minutes of the last committee, which are to be signed by the chairman.

IV. To read the entries in the visitor's book, and appoint a new one for the ensuing week.

V. If the last Monday in the month, to read the bills, and order them to be paid, being first approved by the committee.

VI. To discharge such patients as are judged proper to go out of the house; and to inform those who are cured, that it is expected they return thanks the Sunday following, at their respective places of worship, giving them printed notes, filled up by the secretary for that purpose; and also directing them to return thanks to their physician, surgeons, and recommenders.

VII. To continue such patients as are not now discharged, and have stood on the book two months since their admission (or since last continued), and to send for them into the committee-room [unless by their indisposition they are prevented], and to hear from their own mouths what benefit they have received, or are likely to receive by a continuance in the Infirmary.

VIII. To admit such patients as appear, on examination, to be proper; charging the in-patients to observe the rules of the Infirmary, which will be read to them in their wards; to conform to the directions of their physician or surgeon; to obey the matron; to receive no provisions or medicines from any one out of the house, nor to give any money or gratuity whatsoever to the nurses or other servants; and to acquaint them, that the consequence of their misbehaviour, in any of these respects, will be a discharge for irregularity, by which they will be rendered incapable of a future admission.

IX. To report new subscriptions, benefactions, or legacies, deaths of subscribers, and subscriptions withdrawn, &c.

X. To examine and pay the apothecary, and matron's incident expences, and to make up and balance the treasurer's accompts.

XI. To see what former orders, either of a general court or weekly board, remain to be executed, and whether any new orders are proper to be made, relating to the ordinary expences, government, or conduct of the Infirmary, and of the officers, servants, and patients, belonging to it.

XII. To read the minutes of the day, and adjourn the committee.

The method by which the Auditors may examine the Butcher's and Baker's monthly bills, to see that the consumption of bread and meat does not exceed the stated allowance:

Each of the patients on common diet is allowed four pounds of meat in every week, and those on low diet two pounds, including the butcher's meat allowed to make their broth. Those on dry diet are likewise allowed two pounds weekly each, though they have no broth. They who are on milk-diet are allowed no meat, except on the day of their admission, when all patients coming from the country have an allowance for both after their journey.

From hence the following method of calculation may be established; viz. to double the sum of low and dry diets, to add four [1] times the number of common diets, and divide the sum by seven, the quotient will then shew the number of pounds of butcher's meat allowed for the patients, exclusive of their usual allowance on the day of their admission.

In examining the butcher's bills for the family, observe that they are to be kept distinct from those of meat bought for the patients; and as the daily allowance for each servant is not to exceed a pound of meat, if the number of days in any given time are multiplied by the whole number of servants, the product will be the number of pounds allowed them during that time.

Each patient is allowed a loaf a day, weighing 15 ounces; the whole number of diets therefore in any given time (found by adding the sums of all the four different diets together) is the same with the whole number of 15 ounce-loaves, which ought to be brought to the Infirmary during that time, for the use of the in-patients.

[1] By the number of diets is here meant, the amount of the daily number of patients on each kind of diet, as registered in the diet-book, and summoned up at the end of each month, or other time for which they are audited, being equivalent to so many patients' diets for one day, or so many diets for one person.

A Table of Diet.—Common Diet.

Sunday and Thursday. Breakfast, a pint of water-gruel or milk-pottage; dinner, eight ounces of roast or boiled beef, mutton, or veal; supper, a pint of broth.

Monday. Breakfast, the same as on Sunday and Thursday; dinner, a pint of rice milk, or 12 ounces of baked budding; supper, two ounces of cheese or butter.

Tuesday and Saturday. Breakfast, a pint of panada, or milk-pottage; dinner, a pint of broth, four ounces of boiled mutton or beef, and eight ounces of roots; supper, a pint of broth.

Wednesday. A pint of milk-pottage or water-gruel; dinner, baked pudding, or twelve ounces of boiled roots; supper, a pint of broth or milk-pottage.

Friday. Breakfast, a pint of water-gruel; dinner, baked pudding, or a pint of rice-milk; supper, two ounces of cheese or butter.

Low Diet.

Leicester Infirmary, July 5, 1771.

Ordered, That the thanks of this meeting be given to Dr. Vaughan, by sir Thomas Cave, chairman, for the great care and trouble he has taken in compiling and digesting the rules for the good government of the Infirmary, in the following manner:

"Dr. Vaughan—Sir, it is the unanimous request of all the subscribers now present, that you will accept their grateful thanks, for the great care and trouble you have taken in compiling and digesting the Book of Rules and Orders for the good government and discipline of the Infirmary of this County, which has this day been universally approved of."

Ordered, That the above be printed in the Leicester newspaper, and also annexed to the said Rules and Orders; which are also to be printed.

Ordered, That the thanks of the subscribers be given to the Rev. Dr. Watts, by Sir Thomas Cave, chairman, in the following manner:

"Dr. Watts—The general meeting of the subscribers to the Leicester Infirmary, this day assembled, being sensible of the great benefit and emolument arising to this County, from your original plan and proposal for such an establishment, do unanimously and gratefully beg your acceptance of their thanks on that account; and, as a further testimony of their regard for you, have elected you a governor."

Ordered, That the above be printed in the Leicester paper, and also prefixed to each copy of the said Rules and Orders.

On Wednesday, Sept. 11, 1771, being the day appointed for opening the Leicester Infirmary, about half-past ten in the forenoon, the Governors, attended by the Bishop of Lincoln, formed a procession to St. Martin's church; upon their entrance into which, a grand overture was played; and, during intervals in the Church service, several select pieces were performed from the Messiah, by the most capital performers from London, and other parts of the kingdom. After which, the Bishop of Lincoln preached a suitable sermon on the occasion, from St. Mark, chap. i. and the former part of the 34th verse; "And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases." The service concluded with the Coronation Anthem. Divine service being ended, the Bishop, attended by the Governors, and an amazing number of decent spectators, went to the Infirmary, which they opened with great solemnity, and admitted therein one patient. From the Infirmary the gentlemen returned to the Three Cranes, and the ladies to the Three Crowns, where genteel ordinaries were provided for them. The collection at the church-doors, which was made by lady Robinson, and the lady of Anthony James Keck, esq. amounted, including the admission tickets, to 233*l.* 14*s.* 10½*d.*

In the evening, there was a grand concert at the New Assembly-room, to the most brilliant company that had ever met there on any former occasion. The first violin was played by Mr. Fisher, the hautboy solos by Mr. Fischer, and the songs by Mr. Vernon and Mrs. Barthelémon, attended by a large band of gentlemen performers, and the band of music belonging to the Blues. The whole was conducted by Joseph Cradock, esq. and the Rev. Mr. Jenner. The admittance tickets into the concert amounted to 98*l.* 10*s.*—On this occasion Mr. Garrick very kindly engaged the performers at a light expence, and made an offer of any musick-books from Drury Lane.

In 1773, Lord Maynard was invited to take the office of a Vice-president, by the following official letter:

"For the Lord Maynard.

"The great regard your Lordship has shewn to the humane establishment of the Leicester Infirmary, demands the most grateful acknowledgements of the Governors of that Institution; and I have the orders of their general anniversary meeting, this day, to convey their thanks to your Lordship for all favours conferred on them. It is their unanimous request, that your Lordship will do them the honour to be one of their Vice-presidents, being the only method in their power of expressing their grateful sense of your Lordship's goodness. I am,

Your Lordship's most obedient and humble servant,

Leicester, June 17, 1773. THO. CAVE, Chairman."

Lord Maynard's Answer.

"Sir—I received the favour of your obliging letter by the last post; and beg I may be permitted to assure you and the other gentlemen, Governors of the Leicester Infirmary, of the high sense I entertain of the honour they intend me in making me one of the Vice-presidents. Such an honour I can by no means refuse; and yet, totally unable as I am of attending any of the meetings, I feel myself very unwilling to prevent that office being filled by one whose attendance might be of use to the Society; therefore beg they will dispose of me as they shall judge most likely to be of service to the Institution. Give me leave to trouble you to make my best compliments to the Governors at your next meeting; and to subscribe myself, Sir, your most obedient humble servant, Easton Lodge, June 23, 1773. MANARD."

The Governors of the Infirmary, in the most spirited manner, continued the anniversaries for the benefit of the Institution; particularly in 1774, in which year, previous to the meeting, the publick were thus pathetically addressed by Mr. Cradock:

"Most ages have borne some characteristic mark of their excellence and attainments. It is the peculiar happiness of the present, to be equally distinguished for its progress in the Arts, as for its rapid advancements in the duties of Humanity. The many public Buildings which have of late years been erected, are living monuments of the vast improvements that have been made in modern Architecture; and the various purposes for which they have been applied, as well as the known utility which has been received from them, have alike evinced, that Charity has gone hand in hand with Magnificence. So many Hospitals are now interspersed through the whole kingdom, that there is scarce any part of the wretched who do not in some degree feel their good effects; but this species (of which we now give an account) seems to be the most highly entitled to our attention and regard; for it is founded on the soundest principles of political wisdom as well as piety—is addressed to those who, from their very occupations, must experience the utmost rigours of inclement elements—who breathe as it were disease from the instruments they use, and the materials they employ—to those who, in the hand of Providence, are the bulwarks and security of our national welfare. And where can relief be so readily supplied as in Public Infirmaries? The patients receive every requisite help, the most able advice, the most proper medicines, and in a manner which the rich can rarely experience even in their own houses. In short, what do they not experience, but the most effectual means towards the accomplishment of the best end?

"In the infancy of this Charity, a prejudice prevailed (and where has it not?) that trials of skill were to be made, and that the torture of the patient was the experience of the Physician. The prejudice is as ill-founded as it is illiberal; and has only been propagated by those who wished for some specious pretence for with-holding their subscriptions. This, like most other prejudices, carries the height of absurdity on the very face of it: for what is it but in other words to say, that the skilful assemble to defeat their own art; and a set of gentlemen are employed, at a vast expence, to erect a Charity, to destroy the very purposes of its institution?

"The Poor, who have hitherto benefited by this Charity, have not proved themselves unworthy of the care that has been shewn for them; and we have reason to hope that they will ever most thankfully express their sense of gratitude for the aid they have received in this merciful asylum, as they are now fully convinced of its use and efficacy.

"Of the continuance of such blessings, little more need be said, than that the Charity (as it was first founded) is still supported by men of character and integrity; who will watch with assiduity and care the good work they have begun, and ensure (as far as human power can ensure) that the same care and assiduity shall be transmitted to posterity, of which themselves are such eminent examples.

"Such is the nature of that Charity we so strongly recommend; a Charity beneficial to individuals, and most useful to the Publick: for, though the good man would, in every age, from the generous impulse of his own heart, in some degree supply the want of such establishments, by 'casting his bread upon the waters,' yet he has now the happier consolation to reflect, that, under the judicious regulation of them, he gives that 'bread to the hungry.'"

At the Anniversary of 1774, the new organ at St. Martin's (which had been then just completed by Mr. Snetzler, and paid for by a liberal subscription of the nobility and gentry in the neighbourhood) was opened to a brilliant and respectable assembly; and the following Occasional Ode[1], written by Mr. Cradock, and set to musick by Dr. Boyce, Composer to his Majesty, was performed:

AIR. Mr. NORRIS.

Lo! on the thorny bed of Care
The trembling victim lies,
Deep sunk his eye-balls with despair,
What friendly hand his wants supplies?

CHORUS.

Deplore his fate to woes consign'd,
Deplore the fate of human kind.

RECITATIVE. Miss DAVIES.

Forbear to murmur at Heav'n's high decree,
Nor swell the bulk of human misery.

AIR. Miss DAVIES.

Think not in vain the pitying tear
To thoughtless man was giv'n;
Sweet as the morn its dews appear,
A balmy incense in the sight of Heav'n.

DUET. Mr. NORRIS and Mr. CHAMPNESS.

Here shall soft Charity repair,
And break the bonds of Grief,
Smooth the flinty couch of Care;
Man to man must bring relief.

RECITATIVE accompanied. Miss DAVIES.

Why lingers then the generous flame?
Awake an high enraptur'd strain,
Breathe louder yet—nor yet refrain—
Again—repeat—and yet again—

FULL CHORUS.

To hail the Work the full-voic'd Choir we raise,
And all unite to sing Jehovah's praise.

So great and excellent was the band of musicians on this day, that a capital London performer observed, that if the great Handel had been living, and present on the occasion, he would have declared, that then was the first time his Te Deum was performed agreeably to the sublimity of his conception. For the accommodation of the band, a temporary loft was erected, reaching nearly half way along the nave; and the performers were honoured with the assistance of the Earl of Sandwich upon the kettle-drums. Besides most of the Nobility and Gentry of these parts, who were of the auditory, was Omai, the famed native of Otaheite.

Much commendation is due to a worthy native of St. Martin's parish, who, possessed of interest, kindly made use of it on this occasion, to have the organ inspected, in almost every stage of its building, by the most qualified persons; as appears by the following letter of thanks from the subscribers and parishioners assembled in vestry, Oct. 27, 1774:

"To Joseph Cradock, esq. of Gumley.

"Sir—When so many persons of the first rank, as well as the most eminent musicians, assembled at our late Oratorio, have expressed their entire approbation of the new organ built under your directions; it would be very ungrateful, either in the parishioners or subscribers, not to acknowledge their obligation to you. They are sensible this noble instrument[2] owes much of its perfection to your superintendency, as well as the skill of Mr. Snetzler. Your distinguished taste for music, poetry, and polite learning, have made you justly admired; but it is the application of these talents to the glory of God and the good of mankind (of both which you have lately given a noble example) that makes you universally esteemed. We are directed, both by the subscribers and parishioners in vestry assembled, to return you their sincere thanks, for thus enabling them to have the service of the Church performed in a manner worthy of the occasion.

[1] It was performed at Hinchinbroke, under the direction of Joah Bates, esq.: afterwards at Covent-Garden Theatre, under the direction of the late Mr. Lindley; since that time again at Leicester, when Madame Mara sung the principal air; and different parts of it have been continually introduced into Miscellaneous Performances at several Cathedrals. The Musick of the Duet only is printed (with permission) by the late Mr. Ashley, after Dr. Boyce's Anthems.

[2] It has three sets of keys, from F in alt to GG. The stops in the great organ are, two open and a stop diapason, principal, 12th, 15th, ses-quialtra, cornet, clarion, trumpet. Choir organ, two diapasons, principal, 15th, flute, bassoon. Swell, two diapasons, principal, cornet, hautboy, trumpet.

We beg leave to subscribe ourselves, with the greatest respect, your most humble servants,

William Carte, } Churchwardens
Edward Price, } of William Watts, } St. Martin's Leicester."

The whole expence of this capital organ, including every incidental charge, was 600*l.*

At the Anniversary of 1775, Mr. Cradock's Ode was repeated; and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Parry, of Market Harborough.

An additional wing was ordered to be added to the building, for Lunatics, June 16, 1781. This measure was strongly recommended by Dr. Vaughan; and a legacy of 1000*l.* was left for that purpose by Mrs. Topp. The building, which was completed in consequence, is large and elegant; but destroys the symmetry; though it lies back, at the South-west end of the Infirmary, from the side of the general erection, and looks to the opening of the Raw-dykes at a moderate distance.

Other bequests, for the specific purpose of its being opened, were afterwards received, one of which was left by Mrs. Anne Wigley, amounting to 200*l.* For several years, however, the want of a sufficient fund prevented the good intention from taking effect.

In September 1788 the Bishop of Lincoln preached at St. Martin's, at the Infirmary meeting; and signified his Majesty's gracious intention of giving to that charity, from the sale of Thurnby estates, which belonged to the Whatton family, 2000*l.* three per cent. Consols, with interest from the year 1782. At that meeting, it appeared that there had been received, by legacies, benefactions, subscriptions, &c. &c. since its opening, the sum of 23,548*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*; out of which sum there then remained 379*l.* 13*s.* 8½*d.* And, that there had been cured, in-patients 3384, out-patients 1320; in all 4704. In-patients relieved 399, out-patients 401; in all 800: which make together, cured and relieved, 5504.

At a Special Meeting of the Governors of this Institution, Lord Viscount Wentworth in the Chair, the Committee of Enquiry, who were appointed Sept. 18, 1792, and appear to have sat for 19 days, delivered a very interesting Report on the state of the Charity.

"The Governors therefore desire, in this public manner, to express their thanks to the Gentlemen who attended that Committee, for their laudable exertions, in examining with peculiar exactness the various articles of receipt and expenditure belonging to the Infirmary, and proposing œconomical arrangements for the improvement of its finances. They acknowledge their obligations likewise to the Physicians, for their attention to the interests of the Charity; and for the offer they have made in their Report, to adopt such regulations in the Medical department as are likely to diminish the expence. The Governors can have no doubt but that solid and permanent advantages will result from the investigation which has taken place, and the adoption of the system which has been recommended.

"They feel a peculiar pleasure in assuring the publick, that, upon reviewing the management of the Charity for ten years, at two different periods, though the expence has increased, a proportionate increase of benefit has been received. It appears also, upon a comparison of this Infirmary with 17 others in different parts of the kingdom, that it has provided for its patients with as much œconomy as similar institutions have, upon an average. As the numbers to whom its assistance has extended have increased, its income has been of late years scarcely sufficient for its support; but the Committee have given good reason to expect a gradual augmentation in its receipts. It will not be forgotten that, notwithstanding its funded property, its welfare and continuance must principally depend upon annual subscriptions.

"Among other objects of enquiry, the Committee have turned their attention to the proposed Lunatic Asylum. Upon this subject, Dr. Arnold has come forward with a liberality which entitles him to the public thanks. In a separate Report, he has stated what additions, alterations, and furniture, may be necessary to prepare the Building adjoining to the Infirmary for the reception of Lunatic Patients. He has made calculations of the expence likely to be incurred by opening and supporting such an Institution, and promised that he will most willingly and cordially undertake its management. The present finances of the Infirmary will not admit of any addition to its expenditure; but the Governors hope, that the bounty of the Publick will soon enable them to open the Asylum. They therefore propose a subscription for this particular intent; the amount of which will ascertain on what terms, and in what number, insane patients may be received. They do not presume that the Charity can be carried to its full extent at the first; but judge it expedient to begin upon a small scale, which may be extended in proportion as their plan meets with approbation and support. The following Address, prepared by the Committee, is accordingly adopted:

"Leicester Lunatic Asylum.

"The Governors of the Infirmary, convinced that very extensive benefits will result from the opening of a Lunatic Asylum, for which a separate Building has been erected some years, earnestly recommend that Institution to the attention and bounty of the Publick. They cannot believe that, when liberal provision is made in the County of Leicester for such of the poor as are under the pressure of other diseases, those will continue to be destitute of public assistance, who are afflicted by the severest malady incident to human nature. The Governors are already in possession of certain funds, appropriated by the Donors to this particular Charity: but these are barely adequate to the expence that must be incurred by preparing the present Building for the accommodation of only half the number of patients which it is capable of receiving. They are still destitute of an annual income for the support of the house; and are therefore under the necessity of soliciting subscriptions for the purposes of this Charity; nor can they take any measures for its establishment, on the smallest scale, till they can reckon upon a clear receipt of 100*l. per annum.* Subscriptions are received by Mr. Mansfield, in Leicester. Those who intend to promote the charitable institution here proposed, will most essentially serve its interests by an early contribution, in order that the Governors may be enabled to complete the necessary alterations in the course of the ensuing summer."

A Sermon preached before the Governors of the Leicester Infirmary, Sept. 16, 1794, by R. Horsman, A. B. was published in 1794, in 4to; and in that year the following Address was published:

"The present age has confessedly been distinguished by its liberal exertions for the alleviation of human misery; and, among the various charitable Institutions which are the ornament of our Country, Infirmaries for the cure of the sick and lame in a state of indigence, have obtained the most decided proof of public approbation.

"But the health of the body, however important, is not the sole object of our Hospitals; they furnish instruction for the soul. The poor are here required to worship God, and consider their obligations to him; the sacred Scriptures are regularly read, and expounded among them; and exhortations, reproofs, or consolations, are administered, according to their different cases.

"The utility of these Institutions has now appeared, not merely from speculation, but from a long source of experience. Objections and prejudices which prevailed against them at first have gradually subsided; and not only the very liberal contributions by which they are maintained, but the numerous and importunate applications of the poor to gain admission, demonstrate the very high respect in which they are held.

"The Governors of the Leicester Infirmary contemplate with peculiar pleasure the exertions which have been made for the support and extension of this Charity; and yet it cannot be concealed, that the Expenditure has uniformly exceeded the stated Income; the deficiency having been supplied by casual Benefactions and Legacies.

"This deficiency lately amounted to so large a sum, that it was thought necessary to institute a Special Committee, to enquire into its causes, and the means by which it might hereafter be obviated. Great advantage has been derived from the labours of that Committee. The œconomical arrangements proposed are now adopted, from which the most beneficial consequences are expected; and a pleasing hope is entertained, that, by liberal Subscriptions and Donations, this Institution will be raised to a degree of prosperity which need no longer fear embarrassment, or inconvenient limitation.

"It is, in an especial degree, necessary to call the attention of the Charitable to the important object now in contemplation, the opening of an Asylum for that most helpless and pitiable class of mortals, poor Lunatics.

"That the effects of Insanity are most deplorable, few need be told. Every species of it produces a state of distress and degradation peculiarly humiliating to human nature. In general, the grand concerns of the Soul can no longer be attended to, nor any further preparation made for Eternity. Surrounding friends deeply partake of the calamity, and, in addition to the feelings which the present state of the Lunatic must excite, are subject to the alarming apprehension of those common effects of mental derangement, outrage to themselves or others, or the suicide of the unhappy sufferer.

"The Legacies and Donations of a few generous individuals have enabled the Governors to enter upon a plan of preparing the Building, which has for many years been erected for the reception and relief of such miserable objects; and it is hoped, that the Institution will now meet with that degree of encouragement which its importance appears to demand.

"The Asylum is capable of receiving twenty patients, but it cannot be opened upon so large a scale at present. It is presumed, however, that the Charity is now competent to support a smaller number, from each of whom a weekly payment, as in the similar Institutions at York and Manchester, may be expected; and nothing can prevent or delay the full advantage which this Institution is capable of producing, but a want of that benevolence, in which the inhabitants of this Country have rarely been found deficient.

"The Governors feel themselves under peculiar obligations to those Clergymen, and other Ministers of Religion, who have been the foremost to promote the interest of these united Charities, by acceding to the plan of preaching annually for their benefit; and it is presumed, that the rest of their brethren will soon follow this laudable example, when they understand how much their exertions are wanted."

In the Report of 1801, the Governors say, that "they are under the necessity of stating, that, through the increased expence of every article of life, they are not able to continue their plan upon so large a scale as they have done for some years past. They have long lamented that their permanent income has not been adequate to the full support of the House.

"By the œconomical arrangements which have been made, they entertained the hope of preventing all embarrassments, or inconvenient limitation; but in that expectation they are disappointed, through the peculiar pressure of the present times.

"They had gone so far beyond their Annual Receipts, by endeavouring to give to this benevolent Institution its full effect, in the admission of as many patients as possible, that they were in the year 1796 obliged, though reluctantly, to come to the resolution of reducing the number of beds from 54 to 40; and have since been obliged, by the same cause, to continue this reduction, till last year; during a period when the unparalleled distresses of the poor, compelled greater numbers than ordinary to apply to this Charity for that medical aid, for which many of them had been accustomed to have recourse to the Faculty in their several neighbourhoods, and to pay from their own resources. These applications have been annually increasing with the increasing misery which gave occasion to them; and are now become so numerous, that the Governors, no longer able to resist a distress so grievous and so pressing, have, with a confidence which they are persuaded will not deceive them, presumed upon the public benevolence; and, though still too confined in their income, have ventured to enlarge the extent of their Charity: well assured, that when the friends of humanity shall be made sensible how much, at the present moment, their assistance is wanted, they will bring it with that promptness and alacrity, for which this age is distinguished above all which have preceded, and Englishmen above all other Nations.

"In this confidence they have yielded to the feelings, which the sight of so much misery as weekly presents itself to the view, and solicits the commiseration of their Committees, could not fail to produce; and have restored to suffering humanity some of those beds, which for the last five years have remained unoccupied and useless.

"Last Midsummer they increased the number of beds from 40 to 46: and though the unfavourable appearance of their finances, at the quarterly meeting in March following, led them again to reduce them to 40; yet, re-animated by some recent symptoms of improvement, and trusting to the success of their intended pressing application to the publick, they have agreed, at the present annual meeting, to venture on an immediate addition of 10 beds, and to increase the number to 50.

"In order to do this, they have ventured to borrow money upon interest of their Treasurer; who has cheerfully consented to accommodate them till the public benevolence, on which they have thus presumed, and on which they confidently rely, shall enable them to repay the debt, and to support, without borrowing, this beneficial extension of their Charity, so imperiously demanded by the unexampled distress of that useful branch of the community, the labouring and industrious poor.

"The case is pressing, the want of relief is urgent; and to the humane and good it will not be represented in vain. Distress will excite a generous sympathy, and its call will be heard by the County at large; which will come forward, without hesitation or delay, to make fresh efforts in aid of this noble Institution, and to extend its sphere of beneficence, by adding many a liberal name to the honourable list of its annual Subscribers and Benefactors.

"Were the Clergy, and other Ministers of Religion, in their respective places, to make it, as it ought to be, a general cause, and strenuously recommend its support to their congregations, the most effectual assistance might be expected from their united influence. Much advantage has already been derived from the Collections which have been made in various places of worship; and, were such Collections general throughout the County, and annually repeated, the Infirmary might soon be raised to that degree of prosperity, as no longer to fear embarrassment, or refuse its aid to any of the sick or lame in a state of indigence. It is presumed that the Preachers of Christianity, the Divine Author of which both taught and exemplified the duty of going about doing good, will not refuse their zealous exertions, when they are informed what extensive benefits they may procure to their fellow-creatures in distress."

In 1802, "The Governors add their thanks for the very public-spirited exertions of the Clergy; who have, by their Sermons in behalf of the Infirmary and Lunatic Asylum, enriched their funds with the sum of 1287*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* part of which sum has been laid out in necessary repairs and improvements of the Infirmary; part expended in defraying the increased expence of these Charities above the amount of the Annual Subscriptions; and part in purchase of stock for the improvement of their permanent annual income: And they beg leave to remark, that they place great confidence in the continued exertions of this philanthropic spirit of the Clergy, by which they are enabled to contribute so essential an assistance to these important Charities."

1803.—"The Special Report of the Committee of Enquiry, which was published in the latter end of the year 1802, gives a favourable representation of the result of its researches; and affords a pleasing view of the state and prospect of the Infirmary and Lunatic Asylum, in consequence of the late, as well as of the expected future, exertions of the Clergy, and of the Publick in general; which, there appears reason to hope, will rather increase than diminish. The same number of 50 beds are therefore to be continued in use, for the reception of as many patients; as we agree with that Committee, that, whatever may have been the difficulties with which the Charity has had occasion to struggle, there is no just ground for alarm: and the sum to be paid weekly for each patient in the Lunatic Asylum is henceforth reduced from 10 to 8*s. per* week.

"We cannot be too grateful to the Clergy for those effectual exertions to which these Charities are so greatly indebted, and to a continuance of which they must look for much of their future prosperity: since the benefit of their Sermons is not only immediately great, but may be expected to reach much farther than the Collections made at the time; they will keep up through the County a lively interest in favour of the Institution, and be the probable means of adding to its finances fresh Subscriptions, Legacies, and Benefactions."

1804.—"The Governors have the satisfaction to inform the Publick, that the finances both of the Infirmary and of the Lunatic Asylum are rather in an improving state; and they are persuaded that the same benevolent aids of Church Collections, increasing annual Subscriptions, and occasional Legacies and Donations, which have lately been so seasonably granted, will continue to support them. In this persuasion they have ventured to increase the number of beds in use from 50 to 54.

"The amount of Stock in the Three per Cent. Bank Annuities of the Infirmary is 9533*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; and of the Lunatic Asylum, 666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

"That much of the prosperity of these Charities depends upon their good internal government, and œconomical management, cannot be doubted: nor can it be doubted, that a strict attention to these things can alone be kept up by the exact attendance and inspection of the House Visitors, and the diligent care of Weekly Committees. The watchfulness of these should never be remitted. That it has been too much so of late years is greatly to be lamented; and it is earnestly requested, that the inconveniences arising from this remissness of the Governors residing in the Town, and its vicinity, may for the future be remedied, by a punctual and exact performance of the duties of the House Visitor, and by full and unfailing Committees."

"Anniversary Meeting, Sept. 19, 1806;

Lord Viscount Wentworth, V. P. in the Chair.

"Resolved, That an Extra Report be printed, conveying the grateful acknowledgements of the Governors to the Lord Bishop of the Diocese, for using his influence with the Clergy; and to the Clergy, and other Ministers of Religion, who have so honourably and successfully exerted themselves to relieve the very pressing necessity of this excellent Institution. That to this Report be subjoined an Alphabetical List of the various Contributions made in the different Parishes in the County; and that a copy be sent to every Preacher. WENTWORTH, Chairman."

The Report was accordingly printed, and it appears that the total sum collected was 1003*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*

The Report of 1809, grounded on that of 1806, concludes thus:

"The Governors of the Leicester Infirmary contemplate with pleasure the exertions which have been made for the support and extention of this Charity; and yet they are under the necessity of stating, that they still labour under considerable difficulties, through the increased expence of every article of life, and that their permanent income is not adequate to the full support of the house. It is hoped that this representation will induce the Gentlemen of the County to come forward, without hesitation or delay, to make fresh efforts in aid of this noble Institution, and to extend its sphere of beneficence by adding many a liberal name to the honourable list of its annual subscribers and benefactors.

"The Institution is greatly indebted to the Clergy and other Ministers of Religion, for their effectual exertions, by which at different times very large sums have been obtained, and the pressing necessities of this house of mercy have been relieved. The Governors acknowledge their obligations for this assistance, and hope they may still look for similar exertions, whenever it may be judged requisite or expedient to call for them, through the failure or insufficiency of other resources.

"To the General Infirmary for the sick and the lame, has been added another charitable Institution, equally important and beneficial. An Asylum, in a separate building, has been opened for the reception of that most helpless and pitiable class of mortals, poor Lunatics; but it is much to be lamented, that it has not yet received that degree of encouragement, which might have been expected, and without which it cannot be carried to that extent of utility for which it is calculated.

"That the effects of Insanity are most deplorable, few need be told. Every species of it produces a state of distress and degradation, peculiarly humiliating to human nature. In general, the grand concerns of the soul can no longer be attended to, nor any further preparations be made for Eternity. Surrounding friends deeply partake of the calamity, and, in addition to the feelings which the present state of the Lunatic must excite, are subject to the alarming apprehension of those common effects of mental derangement, outrage to themselves, or others, or the suicide of the unhappy sufferer.

"The Asylum is capable of receiving TWENTY patients; but for want of an adequate fund from Donations and Annual Subscriptions, it is at present opened upon a more contracted scale, and can receive only FOURTEEN, for each of whom the Governors will be obliged to demand Seven Shillings weekly, till such time as the bounty of the public shall have sufficiently increased their resources. They flatter themselves, however, that they shall soon be enabled, gradually, to augment the number of patients, and to reduce the weekly demand for each, as was done in the similar Institutions at York and Manchester. These are Improvements, which will give the full advantage this charity is capable of producing, and nothing can prevent or delay them, but a want of that benevolence in which the Inhabitants of this County have rarely been deficient.

"But the Governors of these Charities are solicitous not only to augment their pecuniary resources, but to improve, and turn to the best account, those which they already possess. They wish that the internal government may be maintained with the strictest attention to œconomy, good order, morality, and piety. But they are aware that such a system, however directed by the statutes, cannot long be practically adhered to, without the constant attendance and careful inspection of the House Visitors and Weekly Committees. With much concern they observe a remissness in these respects, and a neglect of these important duties; and therefore they take this method of earnestly requesting the Gentlemen of this town and its vicinity, to devote some portion of their time, as well as their money, to the improvement of these Charities, and watch over them with constant solicitude, to prevent or correct the introduction of any waste or abuse in any one of their departments."

The Officers enumerated in the Report of 1809 were, President, Earl of Stamford and Warrington; Vice-presidents, Earls of Cardigan, Ferrers, Moira, and Lord Viscount Wentworth; Visitor, the Right Rev. George Lord Bishop of Lincoln; Treasurer, John Mansfield, Esq.; Auditors, Mr. J. B. Oliver and Mr. Alderman Clarke; Physicians, Dr. Arnold and Dr. W. W. Arnold; Surgeons, Mr. Peake and Mr. Paget; Chaplain[1], Rev. Mr. Robinson; House Surgeon and Apothecary, Mr. Joel Marshall; Secretary, Mr. John Flint; Matron, Mrs. Robinson.

 Mr. Howard, in his Account of the principal Lazarettos in Europe, &c. 1789, p. 160, says, "The ground-floors of the County Infirmary at Leicester are brick; the upper floors rough tarras; and none of the windows being open, the wards were very close. The under sashes are not moveable." To the latter part of these suggestions a proper attention has been paid, under the judicious direction of John Johnson, esq. an eminent architect in London, and a native of this town[2].

The CONSANGUINITARIUM (seePlate XXXV.)

is a handsome stone-building, consisting of five houses, in Southgate-street, near the Water-house pump, partly screened by four neat dwelling-houses which bound the street, erected by John Johnson, esq. of London, on the spot where he was born. Each dwelling has a room on the ground-floor, and a chamber over it: the rooms are neat and convenient; and the windows glazed with beautiful stained glass. To each inhabitant is regularly given a printed copy of the following Rules and Orders:

"I. The CONSANGUINITARIUM being an Asylum for such relatives as are, through age or infirmities, incapable of procuring a comfortable residence and support for themselves; the inhabitants of each dwelling will be paid the sum of 5*s.* every week, and yearly receive one ton of coals; except that, out of such sum of 5*s.* will be reserved 6*d.* each week, or more should the same be required, for the purposes hereafter mentioned.

II. That each inhabitant shall, on admission, bring one new, or very good feather-bed, one bolster, one pillow, two pair of sheets, two blankets, a new coverlet, and curtains for the bed; four chairs, one table, good utensils for cooking and other purposes, the whole not to be under the value of 5*l.*; all of which shall be left on the premises at the time of the death of him or her, in each habitation, for the benefit of the surviving inhabitants, who are to be at the expence of the decent burial of the deceased.

III. No inhabitant to keep either dog, cat, fowls, or rabbits, nor any other animal that may be a nuisance; nor to carry on any business in his or her dwelling that may render the same unseemly.

IV. No inhabitant to be allowed to keep any inmate, or any visitor to sleep with him or her, on pain of dismission.

V. No washing of clothes to take place, otherwise than in the wash-house; nor any slop to be thrown in the passage; or dirt, or dust, or refuse of any kind, in any other place than in the brick receptacle, built in the yard or garden. For the first offence against any of the foregoing restrictions, to forfeit 6*d.*; for the second and every other, 1*s.* — N. B. The washing-day of No. 1, to be on Monday; No. 2, on Tuesday; No. 3, on Wednesday; No. 4, on Thursday; No. 5, on Friday. The wash-house to be left clean.

VI. Each inhabitant, in turn, to keep the lawn, passage, drying-yard, and walks to the entrance, gate, &c. clean, and in good order, for a week, beginning with the first inhabited dwelling, on pain of dismission.

VII. Each inhabitant to lock the entrance-gate at going out, or returning; nor to be from home, or have visitors at their dwellings, at a later hour than ten o'clock in the evening in the summer, and nine in the winter; on the forfeiture of 6*d.* each time, in either case.

VIII. No child or children to be admitted into the lawn, on any account.

IX. The rain-water not to be used for any other purpose than that of washing, under the forfeiture of 6*d.* for each offence.

X. In case of sickness, the females to attend on each other, by turn, and also on the males, or be dismissed.—N. B. The coals to be delivered on the outside the railing of the entrance, and to be carried to the several places appropriated by the male inhabitants, or at their expence.

XI. Each inhabitant to be accountable for the reparations, painting, white-washing, &c. of his or her separate dwelling and coal-house.—N. B. The repairs of the other offices and things, and keeping the shrubbery, &c. in condition, to be at the joint expence of the whole—[It is expected, that each inhabitant do keep the garden belonging to his or her dwelling in good order;] and the 6*d. per* week is retained for the several purposes before mentioned. Such of the inhabitants as screen others from the forfeits against the offences mentioned, shall be liable to the same forfeits, if in any way made known to the Trustee Visitors appointed to inspect into the good order of the House.

XII. It is presumed that every kind of good order and decorum among the inhabitants of the Consanguinitarium will exist; that they will be neat and clean in their apartments and dress; vie with each other in acts of friendly assistance to their resident relatives; that they will also duly attend public worship, at such place as is most congenial to their conscience, and give praise to the Great Author of the Universe, for enabling and permitting the Founder of these dwellings to have the pleasure of giving the comforts they afford to them. But should any be so lost to themselves as to sow strife and discord, or by abusive words or actions render the meek-minded unhappy, they will be removed for ever from their places of residence.—N. B. When the expence of the general reparations is ascertained, each inhabitant will have an equal division of the remaining sum of the 6*d. per* week. Then, out of each inhabitant's sum so divided will be taken any expence that has been paid by the Trust for the repairs, &c. of his or her separate dwelling. The forfeits for offences that have been committed will also be given annually to those who are found most deserving."

This comfortable refuge for his distressed relations, which was finished in 1792, was designed and named by, and erected at the expence of, the above-named Mr. Johnson; who, by a deed enrolled in Chancery, charged an estate which he then had at Lubbenham with the payment of 70*l.* a year for the support of the Charity.

The philanthropic Founder is well known by the many substantial public and private edifices of which he has been the Architect; particularly at Chelmsford [1] in Essex, where the Stone Bridge, County Hall, Church, and a very large Prison, were built from his designs, and under his direction, as Architect and Surveyor of the County [2]; an office which he has ably filled nearly 26 years.

[2] At the Quarter Sessions held at Chelmsford in January 1792, the Shire House Committee made their final Report: "That that public structure had been completed in the most perfect and elegant manner, with a saving of near 2000*l.* under the original estimate; and recommended the eminent services of their Surveyor to the consideration of the Court, for some mark of their approbation. On which it was moved by Mr. Bate Dudley, and seconded by Mr. Kynaston, 'That the thanks of the County Quarter Sessions be given by the Chairman to John Johnson, esq.; and also that a piece of plate of the value of one hundred guineas (with a suitable inscription thereon) be purchased out of the surplus money raised under the Act of Parliament for building a New Shire House, and presented to the said John Johnson, esq. as a public testimony of his integrity and professional abilities, in the execution of the said Shire House, as Architect and Surveyor of the County of Essex.' The whole Bench expressed their concurrent opinion of the acknowledged merit of their Surveyor. The motion was of course agreed to; and the Chairman, in a very complimentary address, delivered the thanks of the Court to Mr. Johnson; who returned his acknowledgements to the Court in the handsomest manner. And a Committee was appointed, to purchase the plate accordingly." Chelmsford Chronicle, Jan. 13, 1792.

LEICESTER HUMANE SOCIETY.

The following benevolent plan was suggested in 1805, in a letter to the Mayor of Leicester:

"Sir—We the undersigned, the Physicians and Clergy of the Town, respectfully request that you will call a meeting of such inhabitants as may approve of the institution of a Humane Society in Leicester, in order to consider of the best mode of carrying the plan into effect.

H. S. J. Bullen.	Richard Davies.
W. W. Arnold.	Thomas Robinson.
Edw. Alexander.	William Mandell.
Wm. Ward.	J. Anderson.
E. T. Vaughan.	William Hayton."
Thomas Arnold.

"In consequence of the above respectable requisition, I appoint a Meeting to be held at the 'Change, at eleven o'clock, on Wednesday, Sept. 4, 1805.

Edmund Swinfen, Mayor."

A general meeting was accordingly held, when the business was thus opened by the Rev. H. S. J. Bullen:

"Mr. Mayor, and Gentlemen—The purport of this Meeting is, to establish, upon a respectable scale, a Society upon the principles of the Royal Humane Society; an Institution so replete with good, that it is unnecessary for me to expatiate upon the usefulness of it. Suffice it to say, that, in the short period of 30 years since its first establishment, 3000 persons have been restored to Society, to their Families, and the State.

"Gentlemen, need I inform you that the riches of a country are its population, and that the life of a citizen is one of the dearest possessions we have to protect? Upon this ground, therefore, the wisdom and policy of the measure are evident. But, there is a still higher order of sentiment, that cannot fail of actuating your breasts; which is, the duty as it stands in a moral view. It is the bounden obligation of every good man, especially in this age, prodigal as it is of human life, to be as instrumental as possible in preserving the lives of his fellow-men. The Humane Society eminently presents the means of exercising this virtue: it seems, indeed, as if Providence intended it as a peculiar blessing, to counteract the destructive inventions which War is sure to encourage.

"And here I would suggest to those who are not of the medical profession, that the Resuscitative Process, though generally applied to cases of drowning, is equally applicable to cases of suspension by rope, smothering, suffocation, intense cold, immoderate doses of opium, intoxication, and accidents by lightning; in short, to almost every species of death, where the mischief has gone no farther than merely to the obstruction of the organs, without any danger to those organs themselves.

"Gentlemen, with regard to the local motives which should induce us to further this Institution, you are aware that the great increase of inland navigation has made the possibilities of accidents more frequent, and, of consequence, our obligation to obviate them more imposing. It is a melancholy truth, that of those instances which have already occurred of drowning, in many cases death might have been prevented by the timely assistance of a medical man, aided by the proper co-operation of the publick. But, as the case now stands, there is nothing but ignorance, prejudice, and ill-treatment of a body; enough of itself to extinguish the vital spark, if it were ever so vivid. To overcome these prejudices, and to correct this ignorance, is the province of this benevolent Institution.

"I am convinced, Gentlemen, that I need not adduce further arguments to persuade you to come forward, and, by your generous aid, rescue many a victim from death, and many a family from tears. Under this conviction, I commit the subject to abler hands; assured that the cause of Humanity, if ever so indifferently pleaded, will not have been pleaded in vain before so enlightened an Audience."

The result of the meeting was, an unanimous resolution, to commence a subscription, for establishing a Humane Society, on the plan of that which has so long been successfully established in London; Dr. Hawes, the Treasurer of that benevolent Institution, with the philanthropy for which he is so eminently distinguished, having assisted in its promotion, and countenanced it with his patronage.

The PRISONS at LEICESTER have lately been rebuilt on so improved a plan, that it is pleasant to contrast their former state, as described by the benevolent Mr. Howard[1] in 1782, with their present improved appearance.

COUNTY GAOL.

Gaoler, Samuel Jordan, 1773; William Jordan, 1782.

Salary, none.

Fees, for debtors or felons, 15*s*. 4*d*. Transports; if only one, 8*s*. if more than one, 7*s*. each.

Licence. Beer, to deputy.

Allowance, to debtors and felons, a fourpenny loaf every other day; weight, once, 2 lb. 8 oz.; twice, 3 lb. 5 oz.

Garnish; debtors, 4*s*.; felons, 3*s*.

Number in 1773, Nov. 26,	16 debtors—	3 felons, &c.
1774, April 4,	16	11
1775, Jan. 3,	15	7
—— Nov. 11,	17	2
1776, Oct. 29,	17	5
1779, Mar. 27,	23	10
1782, May 2,	20	5

Chaplain, Rev. James Pigott; duty, Sunday; salary, 30*l*.—Surgeon, Mr. Maule; salary, 15*l*. for debtors and felons.

For master's side 9 or 10 rooms. Day-room common. The side ward, the cellar, is a dungeon, 29½ feet by 9, and 6 feet 8 inches high, down 7 steps, and damp[2]; two windows; the largest about 15 inches square. Felons' day and night rooms are dungeons, from five to seven steps under ground. They sleep on thick mats on the floor; which, if cribs and coverlets were added, would be better than straw. The whole close and offensive. Court small, 36 feet by 17 feet four inches. No chapel.

Two rooms lately built for an Infirmary; but the Gaol is not convenient or healthy.

In 1774, three debtors and a felon died of the small-pox. Of that disease, I was informed, few ever recover in this Gaol. The Castle-hill is near the Shire-hall, and is a fine spot for air and water[3]. Clauses of the act against the use of spirituous liquors painted on the same board with the table of fees. The act for preserving the health of prisoners not hung up. Here, as in many other places, is an useless tub, instead of a bath, for cleanliness and health [1].

[1] "The mention of a character so widely expanding beyond the customary sphere of human actions irresistibly arrests the attention of the heart that glows with admiration at the striking examples of virtue, and of the head that feels interest in tracing the motives which influence the conduct of men." Walk through Leicester, p. 30.

[2] This seems to be the "low moist dungeon" that was complained of by a debtor in the gaol, in his letter, 13 Nov. 1690, sent to Moses Pitt, a prisoner in the Fleet; who printed it, with other letters from prisoners, in his "Cry of the Oppressed, 1691." By this, and one or two more of the letters in that little tract, it appears that some inconveniencies which I observed in gaols, and have set down in my remarks, are of long standing.

[3] See Plate XXIV. p. 303; and Pl. XXVIII. p. 326.

An inscription on a board fixed over the gate, “No money to be asked for by turnkeys, or prisoners, for garnish, or any other pretence whatever.”

In this County they make an annual collection by a kind of voluntary brief. The Gentlemen of the Grand Jury recommend it to the Clergy; most of whom promote the collection in their respective parishes. The thanks of the Grand Jury to 48 Clergymen by name were inserted in the Leicester Journal of Feb. 16, 1775, for the satisfaction of those gentlemen and other contributors. There is a table of the sums received from each parish; and a list of debtors cloathed or discharged; and an account of the expenditure of the remainder in feeding and warming all the prisoners in the inclement season.

The collections in 1774 amounted to 74*l.* I find in 1776 the accounts were kept, and the application of the money chiefly directed, by John Simpson, esq. of Leicester. I wish every County would imitate this exemplary benevolence; and I wish every County that does so, a steward equally faithful and assiduous. I am sorry to find the collection fall short. It amounted, in 1779, only to 12*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*; in 1780, to 6*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*; and in 1781, to 3*l.* 18*s.*

“Leicestershire. A TABLE of FEES to be taken by the Keeper of this Gaol.

For lodging of every prisoner per week —	2	4
For Gaol-fees for discharge of every prisoner	13	4
For the Turnkey — — —	2	0

For signing the certificate in order to obtain a supersedeas — — —	1	0

Thomas à Becket Sessions, July 10, 1759.

We whose names are hereunto subscribed, his Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the County of Leicester, do hereby allow of the above fees to be taken. W. WRIGHTE, CH. HUTCHINSON. J. DANVERS, W. CANT.

We, the Judges of Assize for the County of Leicester, have reviewed, and do hereby confirm, the above Table of Fees. Given under our hands, this 17th day of August, 1759. T. PARKER, JA. HEWITT.

On a subsequent visit, Oct. 25, 1787, Mr. Howard adds, “The debtors' sick ward is still a dungeon; their beds are on bedsteads; but the felons have only the County allowance of mats in their damp dungeons. One small court for debtors and felons. Keeper's salary 200*l.*; out of which he is to give each prisoner three pints of small beer a day. The Gaol now clean and quiet. Garnish abolished.—Debtors, 15; felons, &c. 14 [3].”

COUNTY BRIDEWELL. Three rooms below for men; five above for women; one of these not used, because not secure: no chimneys. Court not safe for prisoners to be allowed the use of it. Allowance now, twopennyworth of bread a day, after a month's confinement. Clauses against spirituous liquors not hung up. There was painted on a board, “By order of the Court, at Easter Sessions 1778, that there shall be no ale or beer brought into this Prison on a Sunday, nor after seven o'clock in the evening on a week-day.”—In a former edition I suggested, that if a wall were built with brick, instead of the clay-wall, there would be no need of a chain and log to secure the prisoners in the Court. The apartments also would be more airy; and men and women might be separated, if the narrow Court were enlarged from the orchard, which was let to the keeper for 6*l.* a year. At my last visit, I found the Court enlarged, and a wall built; but there is not a proper separation of men and women. The prisoners now are without the chain. The prison is white-washed once a year, and kept remarkably neat and clean. The prisoners do not lie on the floors; but, very properly, their mats are on cribs or bedsteads. Keeper a woolcomber; his salary 21*l.* He pays window-tax 14*s.*

1775, Jan. 3, Prisoners	3	1779, Mar. 27,	6
1776, Oct. 29, - -	2	1782, May 2, -	2

Committed from Easter Sessions 1779 to 1780, 48 [4].”

The COUNTY-GAOL (see Plate XXVIII. p. 326) was re-built in 1791, at an expence of 6000*l.* which was raised by a County-rate; and without looks like what it should be; it has a prison-like appearance. The architect, Mr. George Moneypenny, has shewn his knowledge of grand design, bordering on the terrific. In the elevation, the Cap of Liberty, the Roman Fasces, and his own name so large and conspicuous on the front, have been subjects of animadversion; and the following “Impromptu on seeing the Cap of Liberty on the new Building,” appeared in the Leicester Journal:

“It needs no symbol sure to tell,
No tale from classic lore,
That he who enters here to dwell,
Leaves Freedom at the door.”

“This Prison, to which the County Bridewell is now added, was erected, on the site of the old Gaol, five years after the benevolent Howard last visited Leicester. It is built with solitary cells, after the plan recommended by that celebrated Philanthropist; and was first inhabited [5] in 1793. It has four airy Court-yards, with water in every one, and a day-room to each. The Court for debtors is 74 feet by 32, and the day-room 29 feet by 13½; for those on the Master's side there are ten rooms, to which the keeper furnishes beds at 2*s.* 4*d.* per week for a single bed; and if two sleep together, 1*s.* 6*d.* a week each. Common-side debtors have a free-ward, with ten good-sized sleeping-rooms, to which they furnish their own beds.

One room is set apart for an Infirmary.

Clauses of the Act against the use of Spirituous Liquors painted on the same board as the Table of Fees. The Act for preserving the health of the prisoners not hung up. No firing allowed. Those prisoners who work receive all their earnings, but no County allowance of bread. Six debtors and two criminals were weaving stockings, and one making shoes, at my visit in 1803. Here, as in many other gaols, is an useless tub, and two cold baths never used.

Gaoler, John Simons. Salary 130*l.* out of which he allows every prisoner a quart of small-beer daily.

Fees; see Table [as in the preceding column.] Besides which the Under-sheriff takes a fee of 6*s.* 8*d.* for his liberate.

Garnish. None, on any pretence whatever.

Surgeon, Mr. Maule. Salary 15*l.* for debtors and felons.

Number of Debtors,

1800, March 28, .	18	1803, Aug. 23, .	12
1802, Jan. 27, . .	4	1805, Sept. 26, .	8

Allowance. One pound six ounces of bread sent from the bakers every other day, in loaves weight 2 lb. 12 oz. each; and one quart of small-beer daily.

Mr. Gregory informed me no collection had been made for several years; that from 1795 to 1803 the whole amount collected was only 5*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*; and that the balance remaining in his hands was 32*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* [6]

[1] “In many prisons I have mentioned that there is no bath, though baths are ordered in all gaols in the ‘Act for preserving the health of Prisoners.’ I would here also remind gentlemen, that when baths are provided in compliance with the Act, if they be not made convenient, so that felons in their irons may commodiously use them; and if there is no allowance for soap and towels; these prisoners will receive little or no benefit from them, and will never bathe but when actually compelled.”

TOWN AND COUNTY GAOL.

"Gaoler, Henry Coulson, 1776; Samuel Jordan, 1779; William Jordan, 1782.

Salary, none; he pays 3*l.* rent.

Fees, debtors and felons, 15*s.* 4*d.*

Transports, 10*l.* each.

Licence. Beer, to deputy.

Allowance to debtors and felons, 2*d.* a day each in bread (viz. May 1782, 1 lb. 11 oz.)

Garnish; debtors, 4*s.* 6*d.*; felons, 2*s.* 6*d.*

Chaplain, none.

Surgeon, Mr. Maule; no salary, makes a bill.

A common day-room, 12 feet by 9: two rooms above, for such as pay. Down five steps is a dungeon for men-felons; another for women; another for common-side debtors. This Gaol is too close, and is never white-washed; it has a Court with plenty of water, and yet the sewers are very offensive. Neither clauses against spirituous liquors, nor the act for preserving the health of prisoners, are hung up; but there is now (1782) a table of fees.

"Borough of Leicester, in the County of Leicester.

A Table of Fees to be taken by the Keeper of his Majesty's Gaol for the said Borough.

	£.	s.	d.
For lodging every prisoner per week —	0	2	4
For a room of every person who finds his own bed per week — —	0	1	0
For the Gaol, for the discharge of any prisoner — — —	0	13	4
For the turnkey — —	0	2	0
A room called the Debtors' room, if they find their own bed to pay —	0	0	0
For the copy of every warrant or commitment — — —	0	1	0
For signing a certificate in order to obtain a supersedeas — —	0	1	0

"Michaelmas Sessions, 1776. We whose names are hereunto subscribed, three of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the Borough of Leicester aforesaid, do hereby allow the above fees to be taken (the 13*s.* 4*d.* above to the gaoler and the 2*s.* to the turnkey where the prisoner against whom no bill of indictment shall be found by the Grand Jury, and who, on his or her trial, shall be acquitted, or who shall be discharged by proclamation for want of prosecution, only excepted.)

WILL. BURLETON, Recorder,
ROB. PEACH, JOS. JOHNSON."

"We the Judges of Assize for the Borough of Leicester aforesaid have reviewed, and do hereby confirm, the above Table of Fees. Given under our hands this 22d day of March, 1777.

G. NARES, S. S. SMYTHE.

"This is a true copy of the original."

At my last visit, William Slack, one of the felons, had received his Majesty's free pardon (April 9); and was "ordered to be set at liberty," signed Shelburne; but, for the fees of the secretary of state (1*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*) and clerk of assize (1*l.* 1*s.*); the pardoned criminal was still in prison[1]."

October 25, 1787, Mr. Howard adds, "No alteration. The felons complained of illness contracted by lying on the damp brick-floor with only a mat. Keeper no salary. The magistrates continue his licence for beer.

Debtor, 1; Felon, 1[2]."

LEICESTER TOWN BRIDEWELL, at the last visitation of Mr. Howard, was in the Town Gaol, down five steps; two small rooms for men, and two for women. Keeper's salary amounted to 5*l.*

1776, Oct. 29,
1779, Mar. 27, } No Prisoners[3].
1782, May 2,

In 1792, in taking down the old Gaol for the erection of the present edifice, incorporated with the walls of the cells, were discovered the remains of the Chapel of St. John[4], supposed to have been destroyed during the contests between king Henry the Second and his son.

The new Gaol was designed by Mr. Johnson, the benevolent Founder of the Consanguinitarium[5]; and its appearance forms an agreeable contrast to the County Prison. See a small view in Plate XXVIII. p. 326.

On the front of it is inscribed,

"TOWN GAOL, AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION."

Over which are the Arms of the Town, with the Crest.

"On each side of the Gaol is a narrow slip of ground, partitioned off by open iron palisades, and divided into Courts for the different classes of prisoners.

The Court-yard for debtors is 32 feet by 16, with a day-room, 13 feet by 12, and up-stairs eight lodging-rooms; to which if the debtor brings his own bed he pays nothing; the Keeper furnishes a single bed at 2*s.* 4*d.* per week; and if two sleep together, 1*s.* 9*d.* each.

The Chapel, which is in the centre of the prison, is very small; and there is no proper separation of the prisoners.

Gaoler, Welborn Owston. Salary, 37*l.* 10*s.*

Fees, 15*s.* 4*d.* besides which the Under-sheriff demands 6*s.* 8*d.* for his liberate. Garnish. None.

Chaplain, Rev. Thomas Robinson. Duty, Prayers and Sermon once a month. Salary, 10*l.*

Surgeon, Mr. Maule. Salary, none; makes a bill.

Number of Debtors,

1800, March 28, . . . 2		1803, Aug. 23, . . . 5
1802, Feb. 2, ... 1		1805, Sept. 26, . . . 4

Allowance, 22 ounces of bread per day each.

No Rules and Orders.

Neither the Act for preservation of health, nor clauses against spirituous liquors, hung up.

No prisoner who is permitted to work receives the County allowance of bread; but some of them pay one or two shillings per week for that indulgence.

A room is set apart for an Infirmary.

A bath, which has never been used; seldom visited.

The Prison is clean; and there is water in every Court.

There was formerly a Table of Fees, signed by three Magistrates for the Borough, and confirmed by Judges of Assize [see col. 1.]; but there has been none hung up in the Prison these many years.

The Town Bridewell adjoins the Gaol[6]."

BRUNSWICK SQUARE,

of which I have now before me a beautiful Plan designed in 1792 by Mr. Johnson, was intended to have been formed on the site of what was called The Horse Fair Lags (latterly Johnson's Garden[7]), an extensive plot of ground, at that time the property of the Corporation of Leicester. In the area of the Square was to have been St. Margaret's Chapel; on two of the sides, beautiful streets, to be named, George-street and Charlotte-street, after their present Majesties. A Royal Terrace would have filled the side looking towards the London road; and a new Town-hall, on the South side of Millstone-lane, opposite to what is now called Hotel-street, was to have filled the fourth side. Had this plan taken effect, it would have been creditable to the Town; in which no place can be put in competition, either for public convenience, or a display of corporate magnificence and civic grandeur.

STREETS, LANES, &c.

Abbey Gate. An indifferent passage in St. Leonard's parish, leading from the North-bridge to the Abbey. At the Abbey end stands Countess's Hospital: at the other end stood St. Leonard's church.

Northgate-street is understood to take in all that open way extending from the North gate to Sunday-bridge, formerly Sanvis-bridge: some extend it to the Cross. The best buildings stand near the Bridge.

High-Cross-street extends from North gate to Red-cross-street end. In that portion between the North gate and the Cross stand the Town and County prisons, King Richard's house, Free-school, and All Saints church. Here also stood St. John's chapel or church, and St. Peter's. That portion from the Cross to Peacock-lane has been called St. Martin's-street, and Cross-street. This street is a medley of good and bad buildings. At the end of this street the name of High Cross is still given to a plain Doric pillar, which, till the year 1773 (when it was in so ruinous a state as to be dangerous, and an annoyance[1] to the passage in the street it stood in), formed one of the supporters of a light Temple-looking building of the same name, which has been engraved in Plate XXXI. and noticed in p. 354, which served as a shelter to the country people, who here hold a small market on Wednesdays and Fridays for the sale of butter, eggs, &c. Here the members of parliament are proclaimed. Here also may be seen, on Michaelmas-day, the grotesque ceremony of the poor men of Trinity Hospital, arrayed like antient knights, having rusty helmets on their heads, and breast-plates fastened over their black tabards, proclaiming the fair[2].

Southgate-street is now understood to extend from Red-Cross-street to the Infirmary, or Horse-pool-end, an open place, where formerly stood a chapel. That portion of this passage which extends from Red-Cross-street end to the South gate was formerly called, very properly, Castle-street; but in the late rage for altering the names of streets, &c. in Leicester, one of the most narrow entrances of the town, leading from this street, has been honoured with the name of Castle-street: before, properly, called St. Mary's Church-lane. The buildings in general are tolerable. Here stands the Magazine, the entrance into the Newark. The above-named streets, together, form a line from North to South, the extremity of the Town, each way, about a mile and half in length: they formerly constituted the high road from the North of England to the Metropolis.

Passages of any consequence from this main road, beginning Northwardly, are,

Wood gate, an opening leading to Ashby de la Zouch. A few houses only on the right hand.

Senvy gate; so called, it is supposed quasi sanda via, because there used to be general annual processions made through this street to St. Margaret's church on Whitsun-Monday, &c. It has been also called le Skeith; and is a broad way leading to St. Margaret's church. This has no buildings of consequence. Opposite to it is Soar-lane, near the North gate, alias Walker-lane; which leads to the river. A few houses stand on the left, and the Quakers' Meeting-house.

Elbow-lane is situate near the North gate.

St. John's (or Bridewell-lane) and Bull's-lane are situate opposite each other, near the Town-gaol.

St. Peter's-lane is a few paces nearer the Cross.

Blue-Boar-lane (of old The Mayor's-hall-lane, 1 Ric. III.) lies opposite the Free-school; and Free-school-lane at the end of the school.

High-street commences near the Cross, and leads to Coal-hill, or Round-hill, through the East gate. This street is not so wide as many of the streets; but it is in general better built. In it appears conspicuous a lofty hexagon turret, whose top is glazed for the purpose of a prospect seat. It bears on the inside marks of considerable antiquity, and is a remain of the mansion of Henry earl of Huntingdon, called Lord's Place[3]. It has a winding staircase of stone, with a small apartment on each story; and is now modernized with an outward coating of brick.

The Swine's-market (so called 15 Hen. VIII.), a narrow street at the East end of High-street, was formerly called Parchment-lane: it might now, with some propriety, be called Market-street, as it leads to the market, and the Pig-market is removed.

Shambles-street (called Apulgate 1 Ric. III.), opposite, was, till lately, called Shambles-lane. It leads to West-bridge.

Thornton-lane, and Town-Hall-lane, lie opposite to each other; below which are Peacock-lane and Red-cross-street. These are all narrow passages.

Bakehouse-lane, and St. Mary's Church-lane, alias Castle-street, lie nearer the South gate, a few paces from each other. Friar-lane, and Millstone-lane, are situate, the former on the North side, and the latter on the South side, of South gate.

Hangman's-lane, a little farther on, now called Horse-fair-street, is a passage made up on each side with dirt walls, a few little dwellings, a malt-office, and a large wool-warehouse.

Green's-lane, lower down, leads to Swan's mill.

Another principal passage of the Town lies nearly parallel to that above described. It commences at the St. Margaret's church end of Sanvis gate, and extends to the London road above the town.

The first portion of this, called Church-gate, alias Goswell-gate, extends from St. Margaret's church to the Coal-hill. It is in general indifferently built, but spacious.

Archdeacon's-lane, and Bull's-lane, lead from Church-gate. Butt's Close is also situated here.

The other portion, called Golltree-gate, Galtree-gate, or Gallowtree-gate (because leading to the gallows), and Gartree-gate (as leading to Gartre hundred), extends from Coal-hill to the end of the Town, near the Three Crowns Inn. Here are the principal inns.

From the main passage at the Coal-hill, branch out Belgrave-gate and Humberstone-gate, two very open streets (p. 555). The former is well built, and leads to Loughborough; in it stands the Roman milliary.

Humberstone-gate, part of the manor antiently possessed by the Bishops of Lincoln, and still called Bishop's Fee, leads to Uppingham; in it are some very good houses, and others very indifferent. A great nuisance, St. Margaret's workhouse, stands at the nether end of it, in the middle path-way.

The Roundle, now called The Round-hill, Coal-hill, or Haymarket, for it has all these names, is an opening on which stands the old Assembly-room, a building of private property, formerly used on public occasions for concerts, &c. and as a play-house. Under part of it is a machine for weighing coals, &c. The houses situate on it were parcel of St. Margaret's gild. On their East side stood Barehill Cross, alias Barrel Cross.

Silver-street, in a line almost parallel to High-street, leads from the Town-hall to the East gate. It was formerly called The street on the back-side of the Lion; because, where now is the sign of the King's Arms, there was formerly the sign of the Lion, till about 1670. It was also called The old Sheep-market (1 Ric. III.), Church-gate, and St. Martin's

[1] In answer to some objections which had been made to this removal, an intelligent friend observes, "that the trade and commerce of Leicester when the Cross was taken down was great. What was it in 1576? Could the Cross have been repaired, which I question, the annoyance could not have been removed. The Corporation were not actuated by the sordid motives which have been ascribed to them; but by the best, i. e. the good of the Town, in the safety of the inhabitants."

[2] Walk through Leicester, p. 29.

[3] July 27, 1569, John Eaton, of Raunston, gent. and Ralph Eaton, of Leicester, gent. for 100*l.* sold to Henry earl of Huntingdon their capital messuage or tenement, called Reynold's dwelling-house, situate in a street called High-street, or The Swine's Market, and all buildings, &c. about the said capital messuage, with all yards, gardens, courts, &c. Near this place was found the curious old Pipe, with a coat of arms on it, as engraved in Plate XXXII. p. 380.

[4] The Church-gate above-mentioned, St. Martin's Church-gate, Kyr-gate, Kyrk-lane, &c. seems to be the lane from the end of Silver-street, viz. from Mr. Bent's corner to the High-street; and is called The Church-lane unto the High-street in 1 Ric. III.

Church-gate[4], Kyr-gate, Kyrk-lane, Lychyrs-lane, Chyrch-lane; Vicus calidus, or Hot-street. Silver-street is narrow, but in it are some good dwellings. St. Martin's church stands at the West end.

Cank-street leads from New-street, near St. Martin's church, to what has been lately named Cheapside; an open way, which may be considered a portion of the Market-place, below the Conduit.

New-street, leading to St. Martin's church Northwardly, was built on part of the Gray Friars. It is a bad passage, with some good dwellings.

Applegate-street and Bridge-street (the latter a name given lately to a passage, which contains about two houses on each side, leading to West-bridge) form an elbow. These, and the lanes and avenues about them, stand upon the site of the Roman city, in general but indifferently built; but this portion of the town is honourable and venerable, from years, and its antiquarian treasures. Applegate-street, which leads to the church of St. Nicholas, will not be passed without interest by those who recollect that on this spot, where the ground rises in a gentle ascent from the river, the legions of Rome established their town; and we are now arrived at an object which brings them more forcibly to remembrance, a massy arched wall, commonly termed, from its bounding the quarter antiently inhabited by the Jews, the Jewry Wall. This ruin, described and engraved in vol. I. p. 7, will afford to curious and learned observers a valuable specimen of the mode of building practised by the Romans; but the uses for which it was designed will, most probably, for ever elude their researches[1]. The adjoining church of St. Nicholas is a small edifice of very rude, and consequently very antient, construction. The area, Eastward of the church-yard, is called Holy Bones[2].

Loseby-lane, now the Pig-market, a short street leading to Cank-street, contains two or three good houses.

St. James's Square, a name given to a little opening at the upper end of the Market-place, without the least propriety, might be now altered, with much propriety, to Rozzel's-square, in honour of the Poet of that name. His conduct implied this language, "Here will I dwell, for I have a delight therein."

Other lanes, &c. there are, of inferior note, besides those that occasionally change their names with the whim of the inhabitants.

Among these, the MSS. of Mr. Carte take notice of St. Francis-lane, between Wigston's Hospital and the Grey Friers.

From the Nag's Head to Mr. Bent's corner, St. Martin's-lane, Holyrood-lane.

Soper's-lane, the back lane running parallel to the Swine's-market.

Dead-man's-lane; of old, Dead-lane, 1 Ric. III.

Little-bridge, alias Frogmere bridge.

The passage from The George to Horse-fair leas is called Double-gate-lane in widow Brown's writings.

THE MARKET PLACE

is rather small for the abundance of business which is transacted there on a market-day; but the market abounds with every species of good living. For an inland town, it is remarkably well served with fish; and the butchery is the delight of strangers. Here have been repeatedly shewn many extraordinary fine sheep, from the feed of the most capital graziers and breeders in the neighbourhood. The buildings which surround the Market-place have of late years been considerably improved; the low sheds have been removed, and capital dwellings raised up in their room, ornamental, and calculated for extensive businesses.

The EXCHANGE[3] (see Plate XXVIII. p. 326.)

was built in the year 1747, to serve the purposes of the Shambles[4] and Gainsborough. The former was a building of considerable ornament to the Town; the latter, a place set apart for the administration of justice. The upper rooms of the Exchange (as noticed in p. 354) are still used by the magistrates on certain days; but the lower room was only a short time used by the butchers; and is now almost useless.

The CONDUIT, which stands in the Market-place, is an octagon heavy building, intended as an ornamental screen to cover a large leaden cistern. It was erected in 1612, and rebuilt in 1709. The conduit-water, which is brought in pipes from a considerable distance, is used for all choice purposes; and is much esteemed for its purity of flavour. It is drawn from a spring, about three quarters of a mile from this building, in St. Margaret's Field; which spring is covered with a stone-building, to secure it from injury and filth. The inhabitants in the Market-place and streets adjacent have also, by subscription, made a large reservoir near the Conduit, to preserve the waste or overflowing water, to be ready in case of an accident by fire.

ASSEMBLY ROOMS AND HOTEL

That ingenuity of improvement, not only in the conveniences, but the recreations of life, which has lately advanced so rapidly, as well in the provincial towns as in the capital, led the inhabitants of Leicester into a plan for the erection of new edifices appropriated to the purposes of public amusement. The considerable buildings, which in this place arrest the stranger's eye, were accordingly erected by John Johnson, esq. architect, on subscription shares. The front of the Hotel, which name it bears, having been originally designed for that purpose, may, from the grandeur of its windows, its statues, basso relievo, and other decorations, be justly considered as the first modern architectural ornament of the Town.

A room, whose spacious dimensions (being 75 feet by 33, and 30 feet high) and elegant decorations adapt it in a distinguished manner for scenes of numerous and polished society, is appropriated to the use of the public balls. The entrance is in the centre of the side wall, over which is a spacious orchestra, projecting a small way into the room. It is of a semicircular plan, domed, and carried back over the landing of the stairs: the access to it is by a back staircase. The ceiling of the room is arched, and formed into compartments; three of which are large circles, decorated with the allegorical paintings of Aurora, Urania, and Luna. At each end is a chimney, over which is a painting, in a compartment of an aërial figure in a dancing attitude: there are also two others, in compartments, on the side wall. On each side the chimneys are niches, in which are beautiful figures, from the models of Bacon. Mr. Johnson employed Mr. Ramsey Reinagle to execute the Paintings, who has done great justice to his appointment; but they have suffered much from the damp, for want of fire. Beside the eight beautiful lustres, branches of lights are held by four statues from the designs of Bacon. Mr. Rossi, R. A. was employed (partly on account of his mother being a native of Leicester, but much more so from his superior merit as an Artist) to execute the two figures in the front of the building (Comic and Lyric Muses), and the bas reliefs between the windows.

Uniting under the same roof every convenience for the gratification of taste, and the amusement of the mind, a coffee-room handsomely furnished, and supplied with all the London papers, affords the gentlemen of the town and country, as well as the stranger, to whom its door is open, an agreeable and commodious resort; while on the opposite side a spacious bookseller's shop, under the management of Mr. Combe, the very intelligent as well as attentive proprietor, furnishes the literary enquirer with a series of all the new publications.

[4] See p. 513.

Adjoining the Hotel, a small Theatre, built also by Mr. Johnson, neatly and commodiously fitted up, nearly on the plan of the London houses, furnishes the inhabitants of Leicester with a more complete display of the dramatic art than they had before enjoyed, and has been the means of gratifying them by the talents of several performers of the first-rate excellence. The popular pieces of the London stage are here every season represented in a manner pleasing to the town, and honourable to the manager[1].

A View of the Assembly House, capitally engraved by J. Walker, inscribed, "To his Grace the Duke of Rutland, Lord Lieutenant of the County of Leicester; and to the other Noblemen and Gentlemen of the County and Town, Contributors to the Building of the Hotel and Assembly Rooms;" was published in 1800 by Mr. Johnson; and, by his permission, is copied in Plate XXXV. as an accompaniment to his Consanguinitarium.

POPULATION, TAKEN FROM THE PARISH REGISTERS, &c.

On this important subject, I shall begin by referring to the Dissertation on Domesday, already given in vol. I. p. xlviii; where the number of families in this county is pretty accurately fixed to have been about 6820, amounting, on an average of five to each family, to 34,000.

Sir Matthew Hale, in his "Origination of Mankind," p. 234, after a careful survey of Gloucestershire, comparing Domesday and the state of that county at the time he wrote, concludes that the inhabitants were increased twenty times in 600 years; an error into which that great Writer has fallen, by taking no more than the number of persons actually mentioned in Domesday Book; not considering that only the heads of families are there noticed, and that each family would contain, on an average, at least five persons; which will reduce the increase to four times instead of twenty. With this too accords the actual state of Leicestershire; which, from 34,000, was in 1790 supposed to have increased to 85,000; but in 1800 was found, to a certainty, to be not less than 130,000.

To apply this to the Town of Leicester, where in the time of the Norman Conqueror there were only 322 houses, and it may be supposed the inhabitants did not much exceed 1600; the present increase, from the introduction principally of a very considerable manufacture, is in a tenfold degree.

In 1564, the number of families in the Town of Leicester, as officially returned to the Archdeacon, was only 338; namely, in All Saints, 27; St. Leonard's, 32; St. Margaret's, 164 (exclusive of 17 in the chapelry of Knighton); St. Martin's, 160; St. Mary's, 120; St. Nicholas, 22; St. Peter's, 27.

Mr. Throsby's remarks on this important subject, from the Parish Registers, &c. are worth preserving:

"The first statement in the following table is the average of a year in five, at progressive periods, including the four next succeeding years after each date; in the division of each, fractions are not regarded.

St. Mary's, St. Nicholas's, and All Saints Registers, are not much to be depended on before the year 1600. St. Martin's is very clear so early as 1558; and St. Margaret's in 1615; consequently the births and burials at that time are given under the head 1600; and St. Leonard's not till lately. The Register of that parish has been sometimes kept with the officiating minister of All Saints; but latterly with the minister of St. Margaret's.

To the Rev. Mr. Carte's statement of the families and souls in Leicester in 1712, have been added that taken in 1785, and one taken by Mr. Throsby, in which the dwellings are given from the levy-books of the poor, with the addition of some not rated. In St. Mary's parish statement, the Newark and Castle View are included. The statement in 1785 is liable to objections respecting the number of souls, as they were ascertained by questions put to the heads of families, many of whom replied with irony, others grew angry, and would not reply at all, and some evaded answers. Calculating five to a family, is perhaps nearer than any other given number; but the reader may judge for himself respecting the number of souls in Leicester in 1792, from the following Table, whether his opinion be $4\frac{1}{2}$, 5, $5\frac{1}{2}$, or any other number, to a family.

	Mr. Carte's, 1712.		1785.		1792.

The following Table will shew the wonderful increase in the population of Leicester since 1680, when the manufactory of hose was there established. It is taken to shew the progressive increase, at stated periods, from the burials of the parishes, collectively, by Dr. Price's calculation, that one in 30 die every year. The first column commences in 1558, nearly 400 years after the Town was destroyed; but, as St. Martin's Register alone begins so early, the rest are given in that column from an average statement of the increase of succeeding years. The reader should observe that this statement does not include the Dissenters, who bury at their respective places of worship.

	Deaths.	Families.	Souls.
In 1558	100	600	3000
1600	116	696	3480
1650	111	666	3330
1700	151	906	4530
1750	301	1806	9030
1787	419	2514	12,570

To the 12,570 souls supposed to be at present in Leicester (1792), taken from the deaths of all the parishes, being an average of 1787, 1788, 1789, 1790, and 1791, if we add fifty burials, to have been on an average in a year, in that time, at the Dissenting places of worship, it will give an addition of 300 families and 1500 souls, making the number of souls, in all, 14,070."

Such were the remarks of an attentive observer in 1792. By the return, however, made to Parliament in 1800, it appears that the preceding calculation was much too small; the number of inhabited houses at that period being 3205; of uninhabited, 15.

The families were 3668, consisting of 7921 males, and 9032 females; in all, 16,933. Of these 499 were chiefly employed in agriculture, and 11,330 in trade, manufactures, &c.

By the assistance of my very learned friend the late Rev. Sambrook Russell, an ample and valuable account has been given, in a former part of this volume, of the Earls of Leicester of the Saxon and the Norman race. I shall now resume the subject.

The Earldom of Warwick, which had become extinct on the death of Edward Plantagenet in 1499, was revived by King Edward VI. in 1547, in the person of John second son of Edmund Dudley[1], by Elizabeth Grey, an immediate descendant from Margaret daughter of Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick. In 1551 he was elevated to the title of duke of Northumberland; but was beheaded, Aug. 18, 1553, for endeavouring to settle the crown upon the lady Jane Grey, to whom he had married his son Guilford Dudley[2].

The attainder of the Dudley family was soon after reversed by queen Mary; and the title of earl of Warwick again conferred on Ambrose the third son, whose history appears in the following epitaph, which is placed in our Lady's chapel, adjoining to the collegiate church at Warwick, at the head of the monument of Richard Beauchamp:

> "Heare under this tombe lieth the corps of the lord > Ambrose Duddely; who, after the decease of his > elder brethren without issue, was sonne and > heir to John duke of Northumberlande, > to whom Q. Elizabeth, in the first yeare of her reigne, > gave the mannour of Kibworth Beauchamp in the county > of Lyc', to be held by the service of being pantler to the > kings and quenes of this realme at their coronations; > which office and manor his said father and > other his ancestors earles of War. helde. In the > second yeare of her reigne the said quene gave him > the ôffice of mayster of the ordinaunce.
> In the 4th yeare of her sayd reigne she created him baron Lisle, > and erle of Warwick. In the same yeare she made him her live-> tenant generall in Normandy; and duringe the time of his > service there he was chosen knt. of the noble order of the Garter.
> In the twelveth yere of her reigne the said erle, > and Edward l'd Clinton, l. admerall of England, were > made livetenantes generall jointely and seve> rally of her Ma'ties army in the North partes.
> In the thirtenth yeare of her reigne the > sayd quene bestowed on him the office of chief > butler of England; and in the xvth yeare of her > reigne he was sworne of her prevye counsell.
> Who departinge this lief without issue the xxith day > of February, 1589, at Bedford howse neare the > City of London, from whence, as himself desired, > his corps was conveyed, and interred in this place, > neare his brother Robert e. of Ley, and others his noble ancestors; > which was accomplished by his last and wel beloved wiefe the lady > Anne countes of Warr.; who, in further testimony of her faythful > love towardes him, bestowed this monument > as a remembrance of him."

The figure of earl Ambrose is lying on a mat rolled up, and is in plated armour; his hair short and curled, and his beard long; at his feet a muzzled bear.

On the North side are these arms and inscriptions:

Or, a lion rampant queué furchée Vert; Dudley, with a crescent of difference; impaling a chevron between three stags' heads; Whorwood.

> "The sayd lord Ambrose Duddeley > maried to his first wiefe Anne > dowghter and coheir of William > Whorwood esquier, atterney > general to kinge Henry the Eygthe."

2. Dudley; impaling a saltire; in chief three escalops. Taylboys.

> "The said lord Ambrose maried to > his second wief Elizabeth dowghter > of sir Gilbert Taylboys knight, > sister and sole heir of George lord Taylboys."

3. Dudley; impaling Basset.

> "The said Ambrose, aftr he was erl > of Warwik, maried to his third > wife the lady Ann eldest > daughter to Francis Rusel > erle of Bedford, k't of the Garter."

On the North side.

1. Dudley; impaling Bramshot.

> "John Duddeley esqr. second sonne to John > l. Duddeley, and knight of the Garter, > maried Elizabeth dowghter and heir > of John Bramshot esq. and had issue Edmond Duddeley."

2. Dudley; impaling L'Isle.

> "Edmund Duddeley, esqr. one of the prive counsell to k.
> Henrie 7. married Elizab. sister and sole heir of John > Grey viscou't Lisle, descended as heir of the eldest > do. and coheir of Ric. Beachamp e. of Warr. and Elizab. > his wief do. and heir of the l. Berkeley, and heir of the > l. Lisle and Tyes, and had issue Jo. duke of Northumb'."

3. Dudley; impaling Guilford.

> "John duke of Northumberland, erle of > Warr. vicount Lisle, and knight of the Garter, > maried Jane da' and heir of sir Edward > Guildeford knight, and Eleanor his wief, > sister and coheir to Thomas l. Lawarre; > and had issue the sayd l. Ambrose."

At the feet is a shield with 32 quarterings, under a coronet, supported by a goat and a lion collared[3].

Robert Dudley, fifth son of the duke of Northumberland, experienced from queen Elizabeth an ample share of favour. On the 5th of June 1563, he obtained a grant, to himself and his heirs, of the castle and manor of Kenilworth; a noble domain, "to the value of four and twenty pounds and better[4]," which he considerably improved; the charges he bestowed on the castle, parks, and chase, amounting to 60,000*l.*[5]

Sept. 28, 1564, he was created baron of Denbigh[6]; and the next day earl of Leicester.

In 1571, he procured from Henry Fitz-Alan earl of Arundel an assignment of the Wardenship of New Forest, which had been granted to his ancestors in 6 Edward III.; and obtained liberty to found an Hospital in Warwick, for the relief of poor and indigent people; which Hospital might purchase lands in England not exceeding the yearly value of 200*l.* that were not holden of the queen immediately by knight's service in chief, or else by knight's service not in chief[7].

In 1575, he had the honour of entertaining his Royal Mistress for 19 days. Of the particulars of this sumptuous treat, a minute detail was published at the time by Robert Laneham; and also in "The Princely Pleasures at Kenelworth Castle, by George Gascoigne;" both of which have been very lately reprinted in the "Progresses of Queen Elizabeth."

The three following letters, written a short time before the earl of Leicester was honoured with the Royal visit, afford a good specimen of that Nobleman's epistolary correspondence[8]:

[1] This Edmund Dudley, the second son of John lord Dudley, of Dudley castle, co. Stafford, was a student in Oxford about 1478; then studied in Gray's Inn, Holborn; and, for his singular prudence, was made of the privy council to Henry VII. in 1486, being then but 24 years of age. Observing the king to be of a frugal disposition, he in 1506 projected the exaction of forfeitures for transgressions under the penal statutes, assisted by sir Richard Emson (another lawyer), son of a sieve-maker of Towcester in Northamptonshire: whence they grew so hated, that guards were forced to attend them in the streets. In 19 Hen. VII. he was Speaker of the House of Commons; and in 22 Hen. VII. obtained the stewardship of the Rape of Hastings in Sussex. Henry VII. dying, his successor Henry VIII. issued his special warrant for his execution, being then a prisoner in the Tower of London; and, in order to please the people, he lost his head on Tower Hill Aug. 28, 1510. He was author of a juridical book, called Arbor Republicæ, which some time was preserved in the Cotton Library as a great curiosity. He left several children; the eldest of whom was John, earl of Warwick and duke of Northumberland.

[8] Sir Robert Naunton, speaking of the earl of Leicester's letters and writings, which should best set him off, says, "I never saw a style or phrase more seeming religious, and fuller of the streams of devotion, than they were." Fragmenta Regalia, p. 25.—Many of the earl's letters to Gilbert earl of Shrewsbury are preserved among the very curious "Unpublished Talbot Papers" in the College of Arms. Among these are, Apologies for sending for lord Talbot to Court, March 13, 1570-1; a patent of high stewardship of all his lands, as a token of friendship; from the Court, May 26, 1571. A wish to relinquish his troublesome office of Deputy High Marshal; and complaining that his conduct had been misrepresented with respect to certain manors in Oxfordshire; July 5. Treachery of Circar, one of Shrewsbury's chaplains, and Howarth, another clergyman; he calls them "devilish Divines;" Jan. 30, 1571-2. Professions of excessive friendship; Feb. 3. The Queen's favour to the countess of Shrewsbury, June 7, 1575. Dr. Mey's suit for a bishoprick successful; misconduct of Rolston, a servant of Shrewsbury's at Sheffield, Dec. 4, 1576. Compliments and assurances of the Queen's favour, Jan. 18, 1580-1. Beseeching the earl of Shrewsbury to permit lord Talbot to remain at the Court; Nonsuch, April 19, 1585. Had presented his very fat stag to the Queen; Greenwich, April 27 (year not mentioned); &c. &c. &c.

"My L. Wher at your late being here, I conferred with you about the nomination of such as should be put into the graunt for her Ma^{tie} touching Concealed Wards, &c. your L. then named old Mr. Walker; and I named my friend Mr. Townyshend[1] this berer, whom your L. did well allow of: I have synce talkyd with him; and ys at my request very well contented to use his name, and take any frendly peanes for me; and as he is every way a very suffycient man, so have I had sundry ways, very good proofe, as well thereof, as of his dyscretion and judgement in hys doings, besyde those I have thought good to send to your L. to talk withall; and to lett him understand your pleassure touching this matter, yf ther be any thing that you shall think good to impart, bycause he ys to joyne with him that you appoint for the said servyce.

"I have to thank your L. also very hartely, perceiving by Hen. Hawthorn that your L. is plesed to help me that I may have some stone toward the making a lytle banquett-house in my garden. Yf yt please your L. to lett him know your further mynde touching the same, the pleassure wil be great you doe me, and I wyll [be] reddy [to] the best of my power to requyte. And so comytting your L. to the Almighty, the 17th of May [1575],

Your L. veary frend, R. Leycester.

To my very good L. the L. Burley, high Treasorer of England, &c."

"My L. Hit hath pleased her Ma^{tie} to signe the book of Concealed Wardes as hit was sent by your L. Fayne wold her Ma^{tie} have yt but during my lyfe; which, as I told her Ma^{tie}, being only a casuall thing, I wold by no meanes deal withall; neither could I yet tell what benyfytt wold or should grow to me. Sure I was, yf any should, her Majesties person was best and surest. Now being done as it ys, I have thought good to send it to your L. that you will see assurances made from such as are named grantees to us, which I referre to your L. best dyscretion, as also what you shall think meete to consider of, for the use of their names, as for such as shall follow her sewte. For which cause I have sent Joh. Dudley to attend your L.; and what order your L. shall think best, I wyll assent unto it. Or whether you wyll make your profe first agenst the next terme, to see what they will deserve. All which I referre to your L. And so comyttyng your L. to the Almighty, doe byd you for this time farewell. In hast, this Tuesday morning, [June 21]

Your L. assured, R. Leycester.

To the right honorable my very good L.
the Lord High Treasorer of England."

"My good L. The great expectation I had of your being here before this tyme, hath caused me to be more sylent to you then ells I had been; but finding your coming yet doubtfull (albeyt I hope Kenelworth[2] shall not mysse you), I will lett your L. understand such newes as we have, which ys only and chefely of her Majesties good health, which, God be thanked, ys as good as I have long known yt; and for her lyking of this house[3], I assure your L. I think she never came to place in her lyfe she lyked better, or commended more; and synce her coming hither, as oft as wether serves, she has not been within-dores. The howse lykes her well, and her owen lodgings specyally. She thinks her cost well bestowed, she sayth, yf it had been five times as much: but I wold her Majesty wold bestowe but half as much more, and then I think she should have as pleasant and as comodyus a howse as any in England. I am sorry your L.ys not here to se yt. Even by and by her Majesty ys going to the Forest, to kill some bucks with her bowe, as she hath done in the Park this morning. God be thanked, she is very merry. But at her first coming, being a mervelous hott day at her coming hither, not one drop of good drink for her, so ill was she provyded for, notwithstanding her oft telling of her coming hither; but we were fayn to send to London with bottells, to Kenelworth, to divers other places where ale was. Her own here was such, as there was no man able to drink it; yt had been as good to have drank malmsey; and yet was it laid in about three dayes before her Majesty came. Hit did put her very farr out of temper, and almost all the company beside so: for none of us all was able to drink either bere or ale here. Synce, by chance, we have found drink for her to her lykyng, and she is well agayn: but I feared greatly, two or three dayes, some sickness to have fallen by reason of this drynk. God be thanked, she is now perfect well and merry; and I think, upon Thursday come se'nnight, will take her journey towards Kenelworth, whear I pray God she may lyke all things no worse than she hath done here: I hope the better by the good newes. For the graunt of her Majesty touching the Concealed Wards, &c. as I have to thank your L. for the friendly dealings, so will I be no whit the less thankfull than I have promised; and therof your L. assure yourself, though it please you to refer it to my consideration. It shall be even as I offered your L. at first, and so shall your own dealers be the doers as myne. And as I know your L. charge to be as myne, and as your place required, so wold it did lye in me, or may lye in me, to help to better yt; as you shall sone find, when the occasion shall offer, that I will deal no less, but more earnestly than for myself; for so I may do; and what your L. shall impart unto me at any time for the accomplishment hereof, ye shall se how willingly and carefully I will deal in yt. And so wishing you good health, and alway well to do, with my most hearty commendations, will byd your L. farewell. In some hast, reddy to ryde, this Tuesday toward evening, [June 28]

Your assured friend, R. Leycester.

Her Majesty has signed my other book also; but no years after death.

To the right honourable my very good L. the Lord Burley, L. Tresorer of England, &c."[4]

Another letter on a different subject shall be given.

"Cosen Davison; The cause that of late I have not written to you is, for that since Duke Casimire is coming hither, I have bene allwayes almoste in his companye, and otherwise so busied in her Ma^{ties} affayres, that, I assure you, I have had no leysure to wryte. The Duke is a very wellcome man hither, and well lyked of bothe of her Ma^{tie} and of all other sortes here, and hathe bene greatley entreteigned and feasted allmoste every daye; especially the Londoners have bothe feasted him, and given him a fayre present, a chayne and plate, in the whole to the value of 2000 crownes. Her Ma^{tie} lodgeth him, and provydeth his dyet on her coste, in Somersett howse. She hathe made him knighte of the ordre, and giveth him in presents in the whole to the value of 3000 crownes. As he is lyked here, so he lyketh his enterteignment, and taketh in very good parte the greate courtessie he findeth. He mislyketh the States harde dealing wth him for the paye for his services, and is greived to heare howe his men daylye consume and waste for want thereoff; w^{ch} he taketh to hurte him so neare, as that I feare he will either not return thither, or not remaine there, to be so dealt wth any longer. Of the Prince he giveth good speaches. But of these thinges I thincke Mr. Secretaryes do advertyse you more at large. Another thinge I have to lett you undrestand, w^{ch} is this: We are informed here of newe contentious quarrells lately arisen amongst o^{r} Englishe gentlemen and souldiours there; w^{ch} we all here muche mislyke, and are sorry to heare that o^{r} Nation, having gotten some reputation by their valour, should again lose their credit by quarreling, and confirme the badde opinion had of them for their lyke mutinous dealinges in Holland heretofore. I earnestley pray and requyre you to looke into the matter, and by all the good meanes you can to endeavo^{r} to appease and compose it, and to keape them in ordre and quyet; and, to shewe that the authors and causers of suche broyles may knowe how litel credit they are lyke to wynne by it here, I pray you in any wyse to enforme yo^{r}selfe throughlye of the whole matter, and to certefye hither under good testimonye and proofe what you fynde, and whome, to be in faulte, that, when they retourn hither, they may be dealt with as they deserve. I have written to the Prince of Orange, praying his Excell. to enquyre of the matter, and as he fyndeth cause bothe to punishe there, and to certefye hither, assuring him that he shall thereupon fynde howe litle we lyke here of suche dealinges. I send you the l'res inclosed, w^{ch} you may deliver or keepe as you shall see cause. I have written also to Mr. Norriss and to captain Morgan touching the same, and do send you the l'res inclosed. In any wise, I pray you, use all goode meanes to quyet the matter, and certefye throughlye hither what you fynde in it. The Q. Ma^{tie} and all here, thanked be God, are well. Thus, wth my harty commendations, fare ye well. From the Court, the xiith of Feb'r. 1578. Yo^{r} very loving frende and cousen,

R. Leycester[1].

To my very loving frende and cousen Mr. Davison, Ambassador resident for the Q. Ma^{tie} in the Lowe Countryes."

In 1581, the earl of Leicester, who bore such a sway in those days, thought it no small policy to court Thomas Cartwright[2], whom Camden calls inter Puritanos antesignanus, his party in this realm being so considerable; insomuch, that he made him master of the Hospital then newly by him founded at Warwick[3].

In June 1584, he was splendidly entertained in the Town of Leicester[4].

His letter to the Burgesses of Andover, in that year, is remarkable, and not unentertaining:

"After my heartie commendations. Whereas it hath pleased her Majesty to appoint a Parliament to be presentlie called: Being steward of your towne, I make bould heartile to pray you that you would give me the nomination of one of your burgesses for the same; and yf, mynding to avoyd the chardges of allowance for the other burgesse, you meane to name anie that is not of your towne, yf you will bestow the nomination of the other burgesse also upon me, I will thank you for it, and will both appoynt a sufficient man, and see you discharged of all charges in that behaulfe. And so praying your spedie answere herein, I thus bid you right hartilie farewell. From the Courte, the 12th of October, 1584.

Your loving frende, R. Leycester.

Yf you will send me your election with a blank, I will put in the names.

To my very loving friends the bayliefes, aldermen, and the rest of the town of Andover."

The particularities of this great Nobleman's life and actions being recorded at large in several books and treatises, I shall forbear any farther remarks upon him here; only that he had great honours, employments, and advantages; but went off the stage with no applause at all, as he was universally allowed to be the most ambitious, insolent, corrupt, and wicked person of his age. One of the last important events of his life was his attending the Queen at Tilbury, at the memorable period of the threatened invasion, in August 1588; soon after which, in his return to Kenilworth, he was taken ill of a fever[5], at Cornbury Park in Oxfordshire, of which he died on the 4th of September following. His corpse was removed to Warwick, and interred in the Beauchamp chapel; where, on the North side, is a handsome monument, of four Corinthian pillars, supporting an entablature, under which is an arch, over the figures of an earl in his coronet, plated armour and mantle, and of his countess in her coronet and mantle of Ermine, on a table of marble, inclosed with iron rails.

On a tablet within the arch is this inscription:

"Deo Viventium S.
Spe certâ resurgendi in Christo hic situs est illustrissimus Robertus Dudleyus, Johannis ducis Northumbriæ, comitis Warwici, vicecomitis Insulæ, &c. filius quintus, comes Leicestriæ, baro Denbighie, ordinis seneschallus, ab intimis consiliis; forestarum, parcorum, chacearum, &c. citra Trentam summus justiciarius, exercitûs Anglici a dictâ reginâ Eliz. missi in Belgio ab anno MDLXXXV. ad annum

MDLXXXVII. locum tenens & capitaneus generalis
Provinciarum Confederatarum ibidem gubernator generalis & præfectus, regnique Angliæ locum tenens contra Philippum II.
Hispanum numerosâ classe et exercitu Angliam MDLXXXVII. die
IV° Septembris; optimo et charissimo marito mœstissimo uxor Leticia, Francisci Knolles ordinis S. Georgii equitis aurati, et regiæ thesaurarii, filia, amoris et conjugalis fidei ergô posuit."

Within the arch are sixteen flags with arms.

For his issue, it is hitherto uncertain whether he left any legitimate or not[6]; his lawful and true marriage with his second wife, the lady Douglas Howard, daughter to William lord Howard of Effingham, and widow of John lord Sheffield, being dubious, in regard it came in question after his death, and at length adjudged not lawful.

By his last will, dated at Middleburgh in Zeland, Aug. 1, 1587, being at that time general of the English auxiliaries for the United Provinces, he gave Kenilworth to Ambrose earl of Warwick, his brother, for life; and the inheritance to sir Robert Dudley, knight, whom he then thought not proper to style his lawful son, having openly married Lettice, daughter of sir Francis Knollys, knight of the Garter, and treasurer of the houshold to Queen Elizabeth, and widow of Walter earl of Essex, in the life-time of the lady Douglas, and by her had a son; but he died young; for whom, near the altar in the South wall of the Beauchamp chapel, is placed an altar tomb, with his figure in the coat and mantle of a child, and a cap with a double row of pearls on his head, on a cushion, and a bear chained at his feet. In the front is this inscription, in capitals:

"Here resteth the body of the noble impe Robert of Duddely Baron of Denbigh, sonne of Robert Erle of Leycester, nephew and heire unto Ambrose Earle of Warwick, brethren, both sonnes of the mighty Prince John late Duke of Northumberland, that was cosin and heire to Sir John Grey vicount Lisle, nephew and heir unto the Lady Margaret Countesse of Shrewsbury, the eldest daughter and coheire of the noble Earl of Warr' Sir Richard Beauchamp here interred; a child of great parentage, but of fare greater hope and towardness, taken from this transitory unto everlasting life, in his tender age, at Wansted in Essex, on Sunday the 19th of July, in the yeare of our Lord God 1584, being the XXVIth year of the happy raine of the most virtuous and godly Princesse Quene Elizabeth. And in this place layd up among his noble auncestors, in assured hope of the general resurrection."

On the back of this tomb are the arms of Dudley; and the quarters, and the sloping moulding of the tomb, are charged with ragged staves.

It is remarkable that though the earl of Leicester continued in the Queen's favour all his life, he was no sooner dead than she seized all his estates, and caused them to be sold at a public sale, for the payment of money which she had lent him[7]; and certain it is that his widow encountered, after his decease, many serious difficulties.

In 1589, she was re-married to sir Christopher Blount[8], gentleman of the horse to queen Elizabeth, and knighted by lord Willoughby of Eresby in Flanders. He was with his son-in-law lord Essex in the expedition to Cadiz, and had a command there; was elected in 1597 M. P. for Staffordshire[1]; wounded in Essex's insurrection, taken prisoner, tried, condemned, and beheaded[2].

The Earl of Leicester's widow survived to a good old age; and was buried in the Beauchamp chapel at Warwick; where, on the wall above the monument of her husband, hangs a wooden tablet, with this inscription:

"UPON THE DEATH OF THE EXCELLENT AND PIOUS[7] LADY LETTICE COUNTESSE OF LEICESTER, WHO DYED UPON CHRISTMASS DAY IN THE MORNING, 1634.

I.

Look on this vault, and search it well,
Much treasure in it lately fell.
We are all rob'd, and all do say
Our wealth was carried this-away;
And, that the theft might ne'er be found,
'Tis buried closely under ground:
Yet if you gently stir the mould,
There all our losse you may behold.
There you may see that face, that hand,
Which once was fairest in the land.
She that in her younger yeares
Match'd with two great English peers;
She that did supplye the warrs
With thunder, and the court with starrs;
She that in her youth had bene
Darling to the Maiden Quene,
Till she was content to quitt
Her favour for her favouritt.

II.

Whose gould thread when she saw spunn,
And the death of her brave sonne,
Thought it safest to retyre
From all care and vaine desire,
To a private countrie cell,
Where she spent her days so well,
That to her the better sort
Came, as to an holy court;
And the poor y^{t} lived neare,
Dearth nor famine could not feare.
Whilst she liv'd, she lived thus;
Till that God, displeas'd with us,
Suffrid her at last to fall,
Not from him, but from us all:
And because she tooke delight
Christ's poore members to invite,
He fully now requites her love,
And sends his Angels from above,
That did to Heaven her soule convey
To solemnize his owne birth-day.

GERVAS CLIFTON[8]."

"Lettice countess of Leicester, Eue, and Essex, viscountess Hereford, baroness of Denbigh, and Ferrars of Chartley, sister to William lord Knolles of Greys, viscount Wallingford, and earl of Banbury, knight of the Garter, had the happiness to see living the grandchildren of her grandchildren, as is declared in her stem at the manor of Drayton[9]."

SIR ROBERT DUDLEY, the earl of Leicester's son by the lady Douglas, was educated under sir Thomas Chaloner, the accomplished governor of Prince Henry; and distinguished his youth by martial achievements, and by useful discoveries in the West Indies[10]. Notwithstanding his father's character of him in his will, he did not account himself illegitimate[1]; for, soon after the death of queen Elizabeth, having married Alice eldest daughter to sir Thomas Leigh, of Stonely, co. Warwick; and considering that, in case he made good his legitimacy, not only a good title to the earldom of Leicester, but also to many good lordships, manors, and lands, would accrue unto him; he obtained a commission out of the archbishop's court of audience, to examine witnesses to prove his father's marriage with the lady Douglas his mother. But, this being opposed by the lady Lettice, dowager of the earl, and the business being heard and examined in the Star-Chamber[2], sentence was given against the earl's marriage with the lady Douglas, though the matters and circumstances deposed were very pertinent and home to the business; but the credit of the witnesses was suspected. Upon this, sir Robert Dudley conceived such discontent, that he resolved to quit the realm; and for that purpose obtained licence for three years to travel into Italy. But, he being gone, his adversaries procured a special privy seal to be sent after him, to command his return; whereunto he not obeying, his lands were seized by force of the Statute of Fugitives, of which Kenilworth castle, his chief seat, was part. But it was not long after, that prince Henry, affecting this castle as one of the most noble and magnificent things in the Midland part of the kingdom, made overture, by agents, to sir Robert Dudley, to purchase his title to it; and thereupon agreement was made, and, in consideration of 14,500*l.* to be paid within a year, deeds were sealed, and fines levied, settling the inheritance thereof, with some other lands, upon the prince and his heirs. But the prince died not long after; so that there was not above 3000*l.* ever paid, and to a merchant also that broke; so that it never came to the hands of sir Robert. But prince Charles, as heir to his brother, held the possession thereof; and, in 1622, obtained a special act of parliament to enable the lady Alice, wife to sir Robert, because she had a jointure therein, to alienate all her right to him as if she had been a feme seule; which she did, in consideration of 4000*l.* assigned to her out of the Exchequer, and certain other annual payments[3]. On sir Robert's departure out of England, he took with him (as is credibly reported) a beautiful young lady, the daughter of sir Robert Southwell, in the habit of a page, whom, it is said, he married in Italy; and, seating himself in the territories of the duke of Tuscany, had, by reason of his singular and excellent endowments, very great esteem in all those parts. And, his fame spreading into Germany, he had, by grant from the emperor Ferdinand II. the title of Duke conferred on him, 1620, to be used by him and his heirs throughout all the dominions of the Sacred Empire; whereupon he was generally called Duke of Northumberland; as also after him was Charles his eldest son by the daughter of sir Robert Southwell. Farther, as a testimony of the great esteem which he there had, the great duke of Tuscany[4] allowed him a yearly stipend of 1000*l.* sterling; and the daughters by the wife he took thither were all married to several Princes of the Empire. At his abode in Florence he built a noble palace in that city; but, dying at a palace of the duke of Florence's, not far off, in or about the year 1650, his body was first laid in the nunnery at Boldrone, to be removed to the church of St. Pancrace in Florence, where he had erected a noble monument for that wife, with purpose to be there interred himself. Several sons he also left there, but of their fortunes I can give no farther account.

[10] Anthony Wood says, "The duke was a complete gentleman, an exact seaman, a good navigator, an excellent architect, mathematician, physician, chemist, and what not? He was a handsome, personable man, tall of stature, red haired, and of admirable comport; and, above all, noted for riding the great horse, for tilting, and for his being the first of all that taught a dog to sit, to catch partridges."

But for his lady Alice, which he left in England, and the five daughters that he had by her; two of his daughters, Alice and Douglas, died unmarried; Katharine was married to sir Richard Leveson, knight of the Bath; Frances to sir Gilbert Kniveton; and Anne to sir Richard Holborn, solicitor general to king Charles I. And, for the lady Alice, she received the said sum of 4000*l.* payable from the Exchequer. But of her annuity, or yearly payments, there was a great arrear at the beginning of the Civil Wars; for the receipt whereof there being but little hope, and considering that her husband sir Robert, then alive, had the title of a Duke in those foreign parts where he did reside, and representing the same to king Charles I. she obtained a grant under the great seal of England, bearing date at Oxford, 20 Car. I. of the title of a Dutchess during her life, and that her daughters should have place and precedence as children of a person of that degree. And this lady Alice was that dutchess Dudley that lived for many years in the parish of St. Giles in the Fields, and died Jan. 22, 1669, at her house near that church; in which the following inscription was set up, though her corpse was conveyed to Stoneley, her native town;

> " Alice Duchess Duddeley, > a lady of a vast charitable mind, and who did many > good deeds to this parish. She died anno 1669; third daughter > of Sir Thomas Leigh, of Stonely in Warwickshire, Knt.

> grandfather to the Earl of Sunderland. The foresaid Sir > Thomas Leigh had, by the said Katharine, John

In the church at Stonely also an elegant monument was erected, with her effigies, and this inscription:

> " H. S. E.

On the same mounment with her mother;

The venerable dutchess being a person of great piety, prudence, temperance, and thrift, she became enabled and disposed to do many extraordinary acts of piety and charity, both in her life-time and at her death; of some of which, for the exemplariness thereof, I will take the liberty here to give a brief inventory.

She gave 100*l.* to the re-building of the church of St. Giles, with rich hangings for the East end of the chancel: hanging of green velvet for the back of the altar; a carpet of green velvet, with a deep gold fringe, and a cover of cambrick thereto, edged with rich bone-lace. Also, one other altar-cloth of damask, and two cushions richly embroidered with gold; and two service-books, with bosses of silver; and a large Turkey carpet for the altar, to cover it on ordinary days. Also, a rich screen of carved work, to sever the chancel from the church; also a fair organ, with a case richly guilt; very costly handsome rails, to guard the altar of the lord's table from prophane abuses; communion plate of all sorts, in silver and gilt, as large and rich as any in the City and suburbs; a pavement for the chancel, of black and white marble; the great bells, with frames for all the rest, new-cast at her own charges[1]. Also, to the churches of Stoneley, Leek-Wotton, Mancěter, Ashow, Kenelworth, and Monks Kirby, all in co. Warwick, 20*l.* per annum to each of them, for the augmentation of their poor respective vicarages.

[5] Dugdale, Warwickshire, vol. I. p. 261.

Also to every of those churches, as also to those at Bitford, Acton, Patshull, and St. Alban's, certain pieces of communion plate, very rich.

Also, a fair house and garden, near the church of St. Giles, for the parsons to dwell in; with a stipend yearly to the sexton there, to toll the great bell as prisoners pass to execution at Tyburn, and to ring it out after execution.

Also, great sums towards the repair of Litchfield cathedral, and St. Sepulchre's church, London.

Also, 100*l.* per annum, for ever, towards the redemption of Christian captives from the Turks.

Also, 400*l.* to purchase lands for the Hospital situate near St. Giles: and 200*l.* to purchase lands of 10*l.* per annum value, for putting out poor children of that parish apprentices.

Also, to the poor of Stonely, Kenilworh, Leck-Wotton, Ashow, Bitford, Patshull, Lichborrow, and Blakesly, 100*l.*

Also, 50*l.* to be distributed, at her funeral, to the poor of St. Giles.

Also, to 90 poor widows (she being so many years old), to each of them a gown of black cloth, with a large holland kerchief, to attend her hearse at her funeral (which was on March 16, 1669), besides 12*d.* apiece for their dinners that day.

Also, 5*l.* to every parish, for their poor, where her corpse should rest, in her passage from London to Stoneley in Warwickshire, where she was buried, under a noble monument by her erected in her lifetime; and to every poor body on the road, 6*d.* Also, to the poor of Stoneley, to be distributed at her funeral, 50*l.* To the poor of the parishes of Blakesly. Patshull, and Lichborow, 10*l.* to be so distributed.

On a marble monument fixed to the wall under the East window of the Beauchamp chapel:

> "To the memory of the Lady Katherine (late wife of Sir Richard Leveson of Trentham, in the county of Staff. K't of the Bath,) one of the daughters and coheirs of Sir Rob. Dudley, K't, son to Rob. late earl of Leicester, by Alicia his wife, daughter of Sir Tho. Leigh, of Stoneley, Kn't and Bar't (created Dutchess Dudley by K. Charles I. in regard that her said husband, leaving this realme, had the title of a Duke confer'd upon him by Ferdinand II. Emp'r of Germany) w'ch hon'bl' Lady taking notice of these tombes of her noble ancestors being much blemisht by consuming Time, but more by the rude hands of impious people, were in danger of utter ruine by the decay of this Chapell, if not timely prevented; did in her life-time give fifty pounds for its speedy repair. And by her last will and testament, bearing date xviii° Dec. 1673, bequeath forty pounds per annum, issuing out of her manor of Foxley, in the county of Northampton, for its perpetual support and preservation of these Monuments in their proper state; the surplusage to be for the poor brethren of her grandfather's Hospital in this Borough, appointing William Dugdale, of Blythe Hall in this county, Esq. (who represented to her the necessity of this good worke) and his heirs, together with the Mayor of Warwick for the time being, to be her trustees therein'"

And now, having seen the fates and fortunes of the DUDLEYS, we must look for the suuceeding earls of Leicester in the SIDNEYS, of Penshurst Place, Kent, a line connected with them by marriage.

Sir Henry Sidney, son of sir William Sidney[2], knt. had livery of the manors of Penshurst and Yensfield in 1553, on the death of his father. He was highly esteemed by king Edward VI. with whom he had been bred from his infancy, and brought up in the court as a companion to him; at whose accession he was knighted, and made gentleman of his privy chamber, and in the third year of his reign sent ambassador into France, though not fully 21 years old. He was afterwards elected knight of the Garter, was of the privy council, and four times made lord justice of Ireland, and thrice deputy for that realm, which is much indebted to him for the wise and prudent regulations he made, and the public works he effected during his government there. Having in his passage by water from Ludlow in Wales, of which principality he was then president, taken cold, he died, after a few days sickness, at the Bishop's palace at Worcester, May 5, 1586, aged almost 57 years; whence his body was, by the queen's order, conveyed with great solemnity, according to his degree, to Penshurst, where it was interred; but his heart was carried back to Ludlow, and buried there. By the lady Mary, eldest daughter of John Dudley duke of Northumberland, who died on Aug. 9 next ensuing his decease, and lies buried at Penshurst, he had issue three sons; sir Philip, sir Robert, and sir Thomas Sidney, knights; and one surviving daughter, Mary, a lady of learning and genius, and an author[3]. "She was married in 1570 to Henry earl of Pembroke, whom she survived 20 years. The countess died, at a very advanced age, in Aldersgate-street, London, Sept, 25, 1621; and was buried in the cathedral church of Salisbury, without any monument to her memory; the want of which, however, is amply compensated by the well-known epitaph composed for her by Ben Jonson, a tribute that never has been exceeded in the records of monumental praise[4]:

> "Underneath this marble herse
> Lies the subject of all verse,
> Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother;
> Death, ere thou hast such another,
> Learn'd and fair, and good as she,
> Time shall throw his dart at thee."

Sir Philip Sidney, the eldest son, was born, as is supposed, at Penshurst, Nov. 24, 1554: and, had he not been cut off so soon, would most likely have proved one of the greatest worthies that England had ever seen, as well for his learning as his other extraordinary qualities. Camden, in his Britannia, styles him "the great glory of his Country, the great hopes of mankind, the most lively pattern of virtue, and the darling of the learned world." Being made governor of Flushing in Zealand, he went over into Flanders with the forces sent to assist the States; and, encountering the Spaniards near Zutphen in Guilderland, Sept. 22, 1586, was there mortally wounded in the thigh, and died October 16 following, at Arnheim, aged 34, not many months after his father. His corps was brought over to England, and interred with great houour[5] above the choir in St. Paul's church, London, with no small lamentation, not only of the queen and court, but of the nation in general. He left issue, by Frances his wife[1], daughter and heir of sir Francis Walsingham, secretary of state, an only daughter, named Elizabeth, who afterwards married Roger earl of Rutland. It does not appear by Dugdale's History of St. Paul's that any monument was placed there for sir Philip Sidney; but in Popham's "Elogia Sepulchralia" is the following inscription to his memory:

[1] Dugdale, Warwickshire, vol. I. p 261.

[2] Sir William Sidney (descended from William Sidney, who came from Anjou with king Henry III.) had in the reign of king Henry VIII. acquired great reputation in his profession, as a soldier: and in 1514, commanded the right wing of the army under the earl of Surrey at the battle of Flodden field, when he was made a knight banneret. He was chamberlain, and afterwards steward to prince Edward before his accession to the crown; after which, he was one of the gentlemen of that king's bedchamber. He died in 1553; and by Anne his wife, daughter and heir of Hugh Pakenham, left sir Henry Sidney, knt. his son and heir: and four daughters; Frances (founder of Sidney-Sussex college, Cambridge), married to Thomas Ratcliff earl of Sussex; Anne, to sir William Fitzwilliam, knight; Mary, to sir William Dormer, knight; and Lucy, to sir James Harington, knight, whence comes the present sir John Harington, bart. He was buried at Penshurst: where, on the South side of the South chancel, is a fine old monument of stone, under which is an altar tomb of grey marble: and on the wall above it is a plate of brass, inscribed, Here lyeth ſir William Sydney, knight and banneret, ſometime chamberlen, and after ſteward to the moſt mighte and famous prynce kynge Edward the VIth, in the tyme of his being prynce, and the firſte of that name, being lord of the manner of Penſhurſt, who died the Xth day of February, in the VII yere of our Lord God M fyve hundred fiftie and three. On whoſe ſoul Jeſu have mercy.

[5] The splendid funeral procession of this illustrious Hero was engraved in 1587, from drawings by Thomas Lant, in a roll more than 38 feet in length, and containing 144 figures. A fine copy of it, formerly belonging to the earl of Leicester, was possessed by Mr. Thorpe, who has amply described it in his "Custumale Roffense," p. 142; and his account of it is also given in Queen Elizabeth's Progresses.

> "PHILIPPUS SIDNEIUS, Miles, > Henrico patre natus, viro nobili,
> qui ter Hiberniæ prorex,

> & à consiliis Elizabethæ Reginæ fuit:

Sir Robert Sidney, knt. the next brother and heir, succeeded to his estates; and in 1589 was appointed governor likewise of Flushing. In 1594 he was sent ambassador into France, and in 1598 was joined in command with sir Francis Vere over those English auxiliaries then sent against the Spaniards. On king James's accession to the throne (having in vain sought a peerage in the reign of queen Elizabeth, whose œconomy of honours is well known), he was, by letters patent, dated May 13, 1603, advanced to the dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Sidney of Penshurst in Kent. July 24 that year, being the day of the king's coronation, he was made lord chamberlain to the queen; and May 4, 1605, created viscount L'Isle; July 7, 1617, was installed knight of the Garter; and, in farther consideration of his services, on Aug. 2, next year, he was dignified with the title of earl of Leicester, the ceremony of his creation being performed in the hall of the bishop's palace at Salisbury. He was also of the council to the lord president of Wales, and of the privy council to king James; and dying at Penshurst, July 13, 1626, was buried in that church. He was twice married; first, to Barbara daughter and heir to John Gamage, of Coytie, co. Glamorgan, esq. by whom he had issue three sons; sir William Sidney, knt. who died unmarried; Henry, who died an infant; and sir Robert, made knight of the Bath at the creation of Henry prince of Wales; and eight daughters.

Sir Robert Sidney, knight of the Bath, the only surviving son and successor, was, whilst viscount L'Isle, in his father's life-time, chosen one of the knights to serve in that Parliament which met in the 18th year of king James I. and one of the knights for Monmouthshire in the 21st year of that reign, as also in the 1st of king Charles I: and the year after succeeded his father as earl of Leicester. He was by king James several times sent ambassador to the king of Denmark, the States of Germany, and the Court of France[2]; and, on the removal of the earl of Strafford, was nominated lord lieutenant of Ireland, though he never went over thither. He died at Penshurst, Nov. 2, 1677, aged 82 years all but one month; and, having married Dorothy, eldest daughter of Henry Percy earl of Northumberland, had issue by her six sons, and eight daughters. Of the sons who survived him to maturity, Philip was his successor: Algernon was the zealous Republican, who was beheaded on Tower-hill Dec. 7, 1683, æt. 66, for being concerned in the Rye-house plot; and Robert, the third son, died at Penshurst in 1668. Henry[3], the youngest surviving son, was, April 9, 1689, created baron of Milton and viscount Sidney of the isle of Shepey; and April 25, 1694, advanced to the title of earl of Romney. He was master of the ordnance, constable of the Tower, and warden of the Cinque Ports; and died, unmarried, April 8, 1704.—Macky says, "He was the great wheel on which the Revolution rolled." Swift adds, "He had not a wheel to turn a mouse." Macky: "Of great honour and honesty, with a moderate capacity." Swift: "Of none at all."

The eldest son, Philip, succeeded to the titles and estate; and lived, in great honour and esteem, to a good old age, departing this life at London, March 6, 1698. He married Catharine daughter of William Cecil earl of Salisbury, who died in 1658, by whom he had Robert his successor, and two daughters.

Sir Robert Sidney, knight, his son and heir, was called up by writ to the house of peers[4], as baron Sidney, in his father's life-time, July 11, 1689; and succeeded as earl of Leicester in 1697. He died Nov. 10, 1702, aged 52, and was buried at Penshurst, having had, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of John Egerton earl of Bridgewater (who died in 1709, and lies buried there), 15 children, of whom nine died young, and four sons and two daughters survived him. Of the former, Philip, the second son, was his successor; John, the fourth son, was afterwards earl of Leicester; Thomas, the sixth son, was a colonel of dragoons; and Joceline, the seventh son, was afterwards earl of Leicester.

In the church at Penshurst, on the North side, on the upper part of a fine monument of white marble, are seven Cherubims heads placed semicircular, over which are the following names:

William	Charles	Henry	The 1st	Dorothy	Harry	Henrietta
Sidney.	Sidney.	Sidney.	child.	Sidney.	Sidney.	Sidney.

Beneath is an urn supported by two angels, and these inscriptions on tablets of black marble:

> "Robert Sidney, the eldest son; he had wit, judgment, and beauty, to so great a degree, that dayly increas'd the surprising admiration of all that knew him. He died 1680, in the 6th year of his age."
>
> "Frances Sidney, the fourth daughter, in all respects a perfect copy of her eldest brother; so that she was all that could be wished. She died in 1692, in the 6th year of her age."
>
> "To the dear memory of Robert Sidney, earl of Leicester, viscount Lisle, baron Sidney of Penshurst, 4th earl of his family. He married the lady Elizabeth Egerton, daughter to the earl of Bridgewater, with whom he lived 30 happy years, had 15 children of which 9 dy'd young, whose figures are plac'd here; Robert, the eldest son, the 3d and 6th daughters, buried in this place; 6 surviv'd him, whereof 4 were sons, and two daughters. His person was graceful and beautiful, his mind truly noble and great; of a quick wit, good judgment, a sweet temper, and pleasing conversation; he had an honest heart, a grateful and generous spirit, and upon all occasions ever strictly just and good; a faithful friend, the best of husbands, a most kind and tender father, a true lover of the interest of his Country, and the Church of England. He died the 53d year of his age, the 10th of November, 1702, and was buried under this monument; which, in true affection to his lov'd memory, is erected by his disconsolate afflicted wife."
> "To the memory of Elizabeth countess of Leicester, the happy and only wife of her dear-lov'd Robert earl of Leicester, whose death she survived seven tedious years, having lost in him her better life. The affection and solicitude for her children, which was constantly very great for all, forced her a little into the world, and, not wholly giving up herself to what was most agreeable to her, lulling herself[5] in her infinite sorrow: the great desire of her life was to make a good wife and a good mother, and did so. She died, in the 57th year of her age, 1709, and is buried under here, in the same vault with her dear lord.
> "These inscriptions are here plac'd by her own directions[6]."

Philip, the eldest surviving son, above mentioned, succeeded his father as earl of Leicester; and married Anne eldest daughter and coheir of sir Robert Reeves, of Suffolk, bart. by whom he had one son and one daughter, who both died infants. He died July 24, 1705, and was buried in Penshurst church; on which the titles and estate devolved to his next brother,

John earl of Leicester, who was appointed one of the lords of the king's bedchamber, and in 1717 warden of the Cinque Ports, and constable of Dover castle; after which he was made a knight of the Bath, captain of the yeomen of the guards, and lord lieutenant of the county of Kent. In 1732 he was sworn of the privy council, and at the same time constable of the Tower of London. He was a man of most easy and engaging manners; and, though he had led the life of a courtier and man of fashion, his heart abounded with a thousand amiable traits[1]. He died unmarried, Sept. 27, 1737, and was buried at Penshurst. On which (Thomas, the third and next surviving son of Robert earl of Leicester, having died Jan. 27, 1729, without male issue, leaving by Mary his wife[2], youngest daughter and coheir of sir Robert Reeves, bart. only two daughters and coheirs, of whom hereafter); the titles and estate devolved to Joceline, the fourth surviving son of Robert earl of Leicester. He was a man of eccentric and doubtful character, and supposed to have had a touch of insanity. In 1717 he married Elizabeth daughter and heir of —— Thomas, of Glamorganshire, esq.; but died, without lawful issue, on July 7, 1743; being the last heir male of this noble family, in whom the title of earl of Leicester expired.

On the South side of Penshurst church, on a handsome monument of white marble, is a pyramid of black, with the arms and quarterings of the Sidney family, and this motto, Quo fata vocant; and on the base of the monument are the following inscriptions:

> "To the memory of the most noble lord Philip Sidney, the fifth earl of Leicester, viscount Lisle, and lord Sidney of Penshurst, son and heir of Robert the fourth earl of Leicester here interred, who was son and heir of Philip earl of Leicester, son and heir of Robert earl of Leicester, son and heir of sir Robert Sidney, knight, created earl of Leicester by king James the First; which last-named Robert earl of Leicester was nephew and heir[3] of Ambrose Dudley and Robert Dudley, brethren, earls of Warwick and of Leicester, sons of the high and mighty prince John Dudley duke of Northumberland, whose grandson and heir the said earl Robert Sidney was after the deaths of his said uncles, his aunt Catharine countess of Huntington, and his niece Elizabeth countess of Rutland, who all died without issue; which duke of Northumberland was son and heir of Elizabeth Grey viscountess Lisle, daughter and sole heir of Edward Grey and Elizabeth Talbot his wife, created baron Lisle, to them and the heirs of their bodies issuing for ever[4], by patent the 15th of Edward the Fourth. Philip the fifth earl of Leicester married Ann eldest daughter and coheir of sir Robert Reeves, of Thwaits, in the county of Suffolk, bart. by whom he had a son and one daughter, who all died in the first year of their ages; and his lordship, departing this life on the 24th of July, 1705, was succeeded by John his brother and heir.
> John, the sixth earl of Leicester, was cousin and heir of Henry Sidney earl of Romney, and one of the lords of the bedchamber, and lord warden of the Cinque Ports, and governor of Dover castle, and chose one of the knights companions of the most honourable order of the Bath, in the reign of king George the First; and under king George the Second, he was captain of the yeomen of the guard, constable of the Tower of London, lord lieutenant of the county of Kent, and one of his Majesty's most honourable privy council; who deceased unmarried on the 27th of September, 1737, his nieces Mary and Elizabeth Sidney, daughters and heirs of his brother the honourable Thomas Sidney, third surviving son of Robert the fourth earl of Leicester, became his joint heirs, and legal representatives.
> Thomas Sidney, their father, married Mary the youngest daughter, aud, after the death of her sister Anne countess of Leicester without issue, sole heir, of sir Robert Reeves, bart.; which Thomas dying on the 27th of January, 1728-9, was here interred; as was also the said Mary his widow.
> Joceline, the seventh earl of Leicester, youngest brohter and heir male of earl John, died without issue on the 7th of July, 1743, and also lies here interred with his brethren, in whom the title of earl of Leicester expired: So that the aforesaid Mary and Elizabeth, his nieces, are his heirs, and also the only heirs of their noble Ancestors above-mentioned; of whom Mary the eldest is the wife of sir Brownlow Sherard, of Lopthorp in Lincolnshire, bart.; and Elizabeth, of William Perry, of Turville Park in Bucks, esq.; who erected this monument in the year 1743."

Joceline earl of Leicester had, by indenture of bargain and sale in 1738, suffered a common recovery of the manor of Penshurst, &c. &c. to the use of him and his heirs and assigns for ever: upon which, sir Brownlow Sherrard, bart. and dame Mary his wife, and William Perry, esq. and Elizabeth his wife (which Mary and Elizabeth were the daughters and coheirs of colonel Thomas Sidney, third surviving son of Robert earl of Leicester, and next elder brother of the said Joceline) insisted that the said Joceline earl of Leicester was only tenant for life in these premises by virtue of deeds of settlement of all the said premises, dated the 13th and 14th of December, 1700, whereby the same were, after several limitations long since spent, limited to the use of the said Joceline for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the use of Robert earl of Leicester his father, and the heirs of his body, and for want of such issue to the use of the right heirs of the said Robert for ever. And that the said Joceline, by suffering such recovery, had forfeited his life estate, and, having no lawful issue, the said dame Mary and Elizabeth, as heirs of the body and heirs general of the said Robert earl of Leicester, were entitled to the next estates in remainder created by the above settlement, expectant on the said estate for life of Joceline, and therefore that they and their husbands were intitled to take advantage of such forfeiture; and thereupon, in November 1739, they served ejectments on the several tenants of these estates, and commenced a suit in Chancery for the recovery of them, during the litigation of which Joceline earl of Leicester died in 1743, without issue, having by his will, dated June 29, 1743, devised all his estates whatsoever to Anne Sidney, his natural daughter, and to the heirs of her body, with remainder to the duke of Bridgewater, and the heirs of John late earl of Bridgewater; and in November following the said Anne Sidney, then an infant, by her guardians, exhibited a bill in Chancery against sir Brownlow Sherrard and William Perry, esq.; insisting that earl Joceline was tenant in tail by the former settlement, and by the said recovery was seised in fee simple, and claimed the said estates under his will as above recited. After great litigation in the said court, the suit, being at issue, was tried at the bar of the Court of King's Bench April 23, 1745; when, after a long hearing, the jury found a special verdict, wherein the insanity of the earl, before insisted on by sir Brownlow Sherrard and Mr. Perry, was not touched on, but remained still to be controverted; and as both parties found these suits at law very expensive, and that it would be many years before they would be decided; and the guardians of Anne Sidney[5] foreseeing, if the will was set aside, she would be destitute of maintenance: For these reasons, they agreed to compromise this dispute; and they agreed that sir Brownlow Sherrard and Mary his wife, and William Perry, esq. and Elizabeth his wife, should enjoy all the manors and estates whatsoever of the said earl in the county of Kent, free from any demand from the said Anne Sidney, and that one moiety of the same should be settled in trustees for the use of dame Mary Sherrard, and the heirs of her body, with remainder to her and her heirs, and the other moiety in trustees for the use of Elizabeth Perry, in like manner, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants: each moiety to be subject to the sum of 5000*l.* for the use of the said Anne Sidney, who was likewise to enjoy the earl's estate in Glamorganshire, according to his will, subject to such estate as Elizabeth countess of Leicester had therein. All which was confirmed by parliament in 1747; after which, sir Brownlow Sherrard and Mary his wife, and William Perry, esq. and Elizabeth his wife, remained possessed, as tenants in common, of the manors of Penshurst, &c. &c. Sir Brownlow Sherrard died in November 1748, without issue, after which his widow possessed this moiety of these estates, and on March 28, 1752, had the king's sign manual that she and her issue should use the name of Sidney, and the coat armour of Robert late earl of Leicester, deceased.

Mary Sidney lady Sherrard died without issue in 1758; and by her will, dated June 3, 1757, bequeathed her whole interest in these estates to Anne widow of sir William Yonge, baronet, and knight of the Bath, daughter and coheir of Thomas lord Howard of Effingham, for her life, remainder to her son sir George Yonge, of Escot, co. Devon, bart. and his heirs for ever. They in the year 1770 joined in the sale of the undivided moiety of the Sidney estate above-mentioned to Mrs. Elizabeth Perry, of Penshurst-place; and in the sale of the divided moiety as above-mentioned (except the advowsons of Lyghe and Cowden) to Richard Allnutt, esq. wine-merchant of London; who on part of it, called South-park, in the parish of Penshurst, built himself a seat for his residence [1], whose son continues the present possessor of these estates. At Penshurst is still one of the few remaining heronries in England [2]. Vertue's bird's-eye view of Penshurst Place, in Hasted's Kent [3], is very curious. Dr. Ducarel had a list of the pictures in this fine old mansion, which is now in Mr. Gough's possession.

[2] Who was afterwards re-married to John Shepherd, esq. of Campsey Ash, Suffolk; and died May 3, 1726.

[3] This is taking for granted Robert Dudley's illegitimacy; which is not very generally believed.

[4] If this is correct, Mrs. Perry had some grounds for claiming the barony of L'Isle: see p. 543.

[5] I have been informed that this lady (see p. 543) received 20,000*l.* as a compensation.

William Perry, of Turville-park, co. Bucks, esq. who married Elizabeth the other daughter and coheir of colonel Thomas Sidney, as above related, resided at Penshurst-place, which he repaired and beautified, enriching it with a good collection of pictures, which he had purchased in his travels through Italy. On March 4, 1752, he procured the king's sign manual, that the issue of himself and Elizabeth his wife, grand-daughter and heir of Robert late earl of Leicester, deceased, might use and enjoy the name of Sidney only, and bear and use the coat armour of the said late earl. He died in 1757, having had issue, by Elizabeth his wife, two sons; William, who died an infant at Turville [4]; and Algernon-Perry Sidney, who died unmarried in September 1768, and five daughters; Mary, Jane, and Anne, who died unmarried; Elizabeth, the 2d daughter, married Bishe Shelley, esq. whose son John took the name of Sidney in 1783, as heir and devisee to Mrs. Perry. This gentleman, who is now owner and resident at Penshurst, was for some time in the 7th regiment of dragoons, and afterwards married a daughter of the late sir Henry Hunloke, bart. and sister to the present sir Thomas-W. Hunloke, who counterclaimed the barony of Roos, against lady Henry Fitzgerald, in right of the marriage of his ancestor sir Henry with Catharine only daughter and heiress of Francis Tyrwhitt [5]. Frances, the 5th daughter, married Mr. Poictiers, since deceased, by whom she has issue. Mr. Perry left Elizabeth his wife surviving, who possessed the other divided moiety of these estates allotted to her in the division of them; and in 1770 purchased of lady Yonge, and sir George Yonge her son, the undivided moiety of the rest of them mentioned above, so that she was the entire possessor of the manors of Penshurst, &c.; and resided till her death, in 1783, at Penshurst-place, a fine old mansion [6] standing at the South-west corner of the park, which is still, though greatly diminished, of no small extent. An advertisement has just appeared, offering on lease part of Penshurst-park lands, to be divided into farms.

Thomas Coke, of Holkham, co. Norfolk, esq. was elected May 27, and installed June 17, 1725, a knight of the Bath; was created Baron Lovel, of Minster Lovel, co. Oxford, May 28, 1728; was appointed Joint Postmaster General [7] in June 1733, which office he retained till his death (April 20, 1759); and was created Viscount Coke of Holkham, and Earl of Leicester, May 9, 1744. He married, July 2, 1718, Lady Margaret Tufton (fourth daughter of Thomas sixth Earl of Thanet), to whom King George II. was pleased to confirm the antient barony of De Clifford. Their issue was only one son, Edward Viscount Coke, who married Mary youngest daughter of John duke of Argyll, but died without issue Aug. 31, 1753. (Lady Mary still survives.) On the Earl's death, all his titles became extinct; and the representation of his family (his two brothers and eldest sister having also died s. p.) devolved on Wenman Roberts, of Longford, co. Derby, esq. son of his youngest sister Anne, by Philip Roberts, major in the 2d troop of Horse Guards; which Wenman Roberts in 1773 assumed the name of Coke; and by his second wife Elizabeth Denton, of Hilsdon, Bucks, was father of Thomas-William Coke, of Holkham, esq. now member for the county of Norfolk; who, by a sister of Lord Sherborne, has three daughters; the eldest married the late viscount Andover; and, secondly, captain Digby of the Navy.

In 1781, the title of earl of Leicester, and the family estates, were claimed by Mr. John Sidney, as son of Joceline the last earl [8]; and a Trial at Bar was had, Feb. 11, 1782, on a writ of right, and proceedings before the grand assize, in the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, between "John Sidney earl of Leicester, viscount Lisle, and baron Sidney of Penshurst in Kent, demandant, and Elizabeth Perry, widow, tenant," on Monday the 11th day of February, 1782, for Penshurst place, park, and premises, in the county of Kent; before lord chief justice Loughborough, Mr. justice Gould, Mr. justice Nares, and Mr. justice Heath [9].

The barony of L'Isle was unsuccessfuly claimed by Mrs. Perry in June 1782.

The title of "Earl of the County of Leicester" was conferred by patent, May 18, 1784, on George Townshend, Baron de Ferrars of Chartley, Baron Bourchier, Louvaine, Basset, and Compton, the present Earl, who is lineally descended both from the Saxon and Norman earls of Leicester, and also from the Sidneys late earls. His Lordship is also President of the Society of Antiquaries; and, Sept. 14, 1807, succeeded his father in the title of Marquis Townshend.

[3] Vol. I. pp. 408—417; whence much of this account of the Sidneys is extracted. This Plate, which had been engraved in 1747, and had long been supposed to be lost, was luckily recollected by Dr. Ducarel to have been deposited in a particular cabinet at Penshurst, to which he referred; and where it was found by Mrs. Perry, who presented it to Mr. Hasted.

[9] By this Trial, which, "with the Speeches and Arguments of the Counsel and Judges," was published in 1782, it appears that earl Joceline and his countess, about the year 1722 or 1723, were separated, and so continued till his death in 1737. He was only tenant for life. The demand supposes him tenant in fee: and, as if seised in fee, he made a will (which was produced on the Trial) in 1743, devising the estate to a natural daughter, Anne Sidney (afterwards Mrs. Streatfield, of Chidingstone, Kent), in fee. Mrs. Perry was his surviving niece, to whom and her sister [the late lady Sherrard] his estates descended, and with them he joined in a deed to raise money in 1742, declaring that at that time he had no male issue. He died in 1743. The demandant states, that he was born in 1738. Yet, allowing his legitimacy, which was not contested, the tenant has the greater right, claiming as heir-general of the first settler (Robert earl of Leicester) in 1700, which was incontrovertibly proved. And on the equitable maxim, In æquali jure melior est conditio possidentis; and earl Jocelyn having devised away his estate by a will, duly executed; the grand assize had no difficulty in finding their verdict (as the Court directed) for the tenant, agreeing that "Elizabeth Perry has the best right to hold the premises and appurtenances mentioned to her and her heirs." Thus Mr. Sidney, though he lost the estate, gained a nominal peerage; the shadow, but not the substance.—The case, as to the legal privilege of legitimacy, appears to have been exactly similar in point of law to that of the earls of Banbury. But the fate of Mr. Sidney was peculiarly hard. He was the reputed son of a farmer; but was undoubtedly son of the countess of Leicester, and consequently, in foro juris, of the earl, being born not only in wedlock, but when (though they had been many years separated) there was no divorce between the parties; which on the Trial seems to have been admitted on both sides. It is not at all wonderful that the earl of Leicester should have passed him by unnoticed; but, strange to say, he was equally neglected by his mother, who died when he was young. He was brought up in the neighbourhood of Penshurst; articled to an obscure attorney; practised some time in that profession; and was not long since living in West Kent.

[2] Dugdale (Bar. II. 222.) mentions the death of the first of these ladies (which happened before her husband was ennobled) at one Mr. Foster's house at Cumner near Oxford, by a fall down stairs, as 'twas said. But the character of Mr. Foster stands not clear of the imputation of having been accessary to her murder. A chamber is shewn in the ruined mansion, which adjoins the church-yard at Cumner, called the Dudley chamber, where this lady was said to have been murdered, and afterwards thrown down stairs to make it appear that her death was accidental. She was buried at Cumner; but her body was afterwards removed to St. Mary's church in Oxford. Dr. Babington, lord Robert Dudley's chaplain, preaching her funeral sermon at the second interment, recommended to the memory of his audience the virtuous lady so piteously murdered. See Ashmole's Berkshire; Gervase Holles's Memoirs of the Holles family; and Reflections on the Augmentation of the English Peerage, p. 89.

[3] Widow of Walter Devereux, earl of Essex. She married, 3dly, 1589, sir Christopher Blount, kt.; and died Dec. 25, 1634.

[4] Of whom see p. 540. He died May 5, 1586, aged 57. See Holland's Heroologia. Most beautiful portraits of him and his wife are at Penshurst. See an account of the Sidney family in the Kentish Register, 1793, vol. I. pp. 143. 181.

[5] Called duke of Northumberland; and was probably legitimate. See p. 539.

[1] There is a Court at Westminster, called The Dutchy Court of Lancaster, where all causes any way relating to the revenue of the Dutchy of Lancaster are tried. Another branch of the same Court is established at Preston in Lancashire, called The Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster, for the same purposes in that county as the other is in Westminster. These Courts were erected by King Henry IV. after his having deposed King Richard II.; when, possessing the Dutchy of Lancaster in right of his mother, he imagined his claim to it better than that to the Throne, and therefore separated it from the Crown, and erected these Courts for its use. The Chief Judge of these Courts is the Chancellor, under whom are a set of inferior officers in each Court for the conducting of business.—See Prynne's 4th Institute, for distinction between Dutchy of Lancaster and Crown.

DISSENTING PLACES OF WORSHIP.

The Presbyterian, or Great Meeting House, built in 1708 for the use of a congregation which was first established in 1680, is situated near the Butt Close, in St. Margaret's parish. It forms a square, nearly in the centre of the Meeting-house yard, built of brick, and is by far the largest, including every other denomination, in the Town. The congregation are genteel and numerous; several of the first families of the Town being Presbyterians. The seats are calculated for the accommodation of 800 persons. An organ was erected here in 1800, a valuable advantage to the choir, who form a musical society, cultivated with great care, and justly celebrated for its excellence. This place has a burial ground.

With much pleasure I here repeat a tribute which in another place[1] has been paid to the memory of the Rev. Hugh Worthington, M. A. who died at the age of 86, Oct. 29, 1797, after having been 56 years the much-respected pastor of this Dissenting Congregation[2]. His literary abilities and benevolence of character were well known; and his loss sincerely lamented by his numerous congregation, who revered him as a minister, and loved him as their friend. A life prolonged beyond its utility was the greatest trial he feared; but this was graciously superseded. The Lord's day previous to his death he exerted himself in prayer; and, strenuous to his duty to the last, he spent the few remaining days in advising, admonishing, and exhorting those around him to be stedfast in duty; that, though he was leaving them, they would soon meet again, where friendship would reign in much higher perfection, and separation take place no more. He lay some hours without motion, and at last expired so easy, that his departure was scarcely perceptible to those around him. He might have done as Addison and Beattie did before him,—challenge the Infidel to come and see how a Christian could die. He printed a Sermon on the Fast, 1752; another on the Death of J. Dawson, 1757; and in 1785 an octavo volume of "Discourses on various Subjects, Evangelical and Practical;" composed with the best design; that of edifying his flock, and impressing their minds with a deep sense of the nature and obligations of Christian piety, and the moral duties of human life[3].

On a marble slab in the Meeting-house is the following epitaph: "To the memory of the Rev. Hugh Worthington, who died Oct. 16, 1797, aged 86, pastor of this church 56 years.

To the reverence due to superior talents unceasingly exerted to enlighten and improve mankind, he was peculiarly entitled. The affectionate warmth of his attachment as a friend will leave an indelible impression on the minds of his near connexions. The value of his public and private services, as a Christian minister, manifested by the rational fervour of his devotion, the uncommon energy of his addresses, and his assiduous attention to the other pastoral duties, can alone be properly estimated (as these will long be gratefully remembered) by this Congregation. To his exemplary conduct in all the intercourses of social life, the inhabitants of this Town and Society at large will bear respectful testimony.

May the eloquence of the Tomb still edify the survivors of him, whose living example, alas! can no longer stimulate to a virtuous emulation."

The Rev. Mr. Jacomb, who succeeded Mr. Worthington as minister here, has since resigned; and has been succeeded by the Rev. Charles Berry, the present minister.

Opposite the Great Meeting is a Meeting-house newly erected by a Society of Independents. A gallery is now erecting in this Meeting-house, on both sides of it, which, with one at the end erected before is supposed to make it capable of containing near 800 persons. The Rev. Thomas Cave, M. A. is the present minister.

In a lane not far from St. Nicholas' church, called Harvey-lane, is the Meeting-house of the Particular Calvinistic Baptists, which is capable of containing 500 persons; with a large vestry. The Rev. Robert Hall[4], M. A. is the present minister.

The Meeting-house of the General Baptists is situate in Friar-lane, and has a respectable appearance without; but it stands in a yard, screened by buildings. The present minister is Mr. John Deacon. On a tablet on the outside:

"This Edifice,
appropriated to the public worship of Almighty God, and the preaching of the gospel of Christ, was erected by the General Baptists, assisted by others of their Protestant Brethren, MDCCLXXXV."

Each of these Baptist Meetings has a burial-ground.

In Archdeacon-lane is a Meeting-house for another Society of General Baptists; Mr. Thomas Stevenson is the present minister.

In Woman's-lane (formerly called St. Peter's-lane) is another Meeting-house, erected in 1803 by a society calling themselves Episcopalian Baptists[5]. This is called Ebenezer Chapel. Mr. Horne late minister.

The small Catholic Chapel is built in a lane now called Causeway-lane, but formerly St. John's leading to the Town gaol, the site of St. John's chapel. It is secluded from observation, being situated behind the house of the officiating priest, and is a neat miniature representation of the peculiar decorations with which the members of that religion adorn the places where they offer up their public devotions. Their priest is the Rev. Mr. Chapel, a gentleman of education, and suavity of manners; but he makes no proselytes. It is believed that not a family or individual have been added to this small congregation in the space of fifty years. I rather think several have seceded in that space of time[6].

The Quakers Meeting-house, rather obscurely situated, near the North gate, is a small, but neat place of worship. The Quakers in Leicester and the neighbourhood are not numerous, though the founder of this sect, George Fox, began his career in this county. A burial-ground is attached to this place. I think the Quakers here retain more of the original simplicity of dress and manners than in any other place I have seen[7].

Millstone-lane Meeting-house, or that under the denomination of Mr. Wesley's connexion, was lately built; towards the expence of which the inhabitants of the town in general were solicited. This also is a square building; the front of brick, ornamented with stone. The building occupied before by these people stood on the same site, and was used originally by strolling players. This congregation is numerous. These being upon the itinerant plan, the minister is changed every year, or every two years at the farthest.

In Granby-street, near the London road, is a large chapel, called Hephzebah Chapel, belonging to the new Methodists, who are seceders from the connexion as established by the late Rev. John Wesley. These have no regular minister; but are frequently changing from one place to another.

In Free-school-lane is a small Meeting-house for the followers of the late Rev. Jeremiah Learnhoult Garrett; who has not yet a successor.

A Society of Sandemanians is statedly held in a room in Town-hall-lane. No regular preacher.

A Society of Huntingtonians statedly hold a meeting in a large room in Bond-street. They have no preacher; but read Huntington's works.

A Society of Swedenborgians have a small meeting in Sanvey-gate.

ALL SAINTS

includes the antient parish of St. Michael, and the greater part, if not the whole, of St. Clement; to which, in 1584, St. Peter's was also added.

The united parishes contain within their limits the County and Town Gaols, as delineated in a former part of this volume, Plate XXVIII. p. 326; and described in pp. 529—532. They are both situated in High Cross street.

Of St. Michael's and St. Peter's churches before the union, some account has been given in p. 327; of St. Clement's, p. 328.

A lease occurs from John Harlexton of Leicester, to John Seyton and another, of a messuage in Le Skeyth, alias Senvey gate, in the parish of All Saints, Leicester; dated Friday in Pentecost week, 5 Edw. IV.

The Return made to Parliament in 1786, in answer to an enquiry respecting the charitable donations in this parish, may be seen in vol. I. p. 117.

The CHURCH (see before, Plate XXIV. p. 303.) projecting on the West and into High Cross street, consists of a low embattled tower (in which are five bells), a good chancel, nave, and two ailes; and, though not large, is convenient and handsome; and is well-paved.

The pillars and arches which support the roof of the nave are plain, and rather low.

On the North side of All Saints church, in the third window from the West, in the nave, which overlooks the leads, is the inscription [2] represented in Plate XXXVIII. fig. 1. 2. 3.

No. 1. intersects the middle light.

The next or right-hand light in the said window has the couple of lines in No. 2. near each other, and parallel, included in an irregular sphere of glass, that just contains them.

No. 3. a single word, in the left-hand light of the first window from the chancel, in the same wall, and parallel with the other literary window.

A fire-place was formerly in the belfry, about three yards from the ground-floor. Its frame remains, opposite a door-passage; which, before it was blocked up, communicated with the stairs that lead to the steeple. The chamber-beams occupied holes in the walls, large and deep, which were filled up before the year 1790. The ground-floor [3] of the belfry was of equal extent with the room above, from 12 to 14 feet; from East to West, 24 feet.

The font is old and circular; see fig. 4.

Mr. Burton found these arms in the church of All Saints; Pl. XXIV. p. 303.

1. Gules, three lions passant guardant in pale Or. England.

2. Gules, three lions passant guardant in pale Or, a bend Azure. De Monmouth.

11. Azure, a bend between six mullets Argent. Hoby.

12. Azure, a pale between six mullets Argent. Hoby.

13. Azure, three water-bougets Argent, on a chief Gules, three annulets Or.

And these in St. Leonard's church:

14. Gules, a lion rampant Argent. Mowbray.

15. Gules, seven mascles voided and conjoined Or. Quincy.

16. Sable, three fishes naiant Argent. Fisher.

In the Matriculus of 1220, the churches of All Saints, St. Clement, St. Michael, and St. Peter, are all described to be under the patronage of the Abbot of Leicester, who held them in proprios usus ab antiquo; and of St. Clement, it is thus noticed, vix sufficit ad sustentationem capellani [4].

In the Roll of 1344, St. Clement's is wholly omitted; but the churches of All Saints, St. Michael, and St. Peter, are each charged 7*s.* 6¾*d.* for procurations; and the Abbot of Leicester had a pension of one shilling from each. St. Peter's paid 1*s.* 4*d.* for Peter-pence; the other churches nothing.

In 1534, the procurations and synodals for All Saints are 9*s.* 11*d.*; for St. Peter's no charge is entered.

In 1650, the vicarage was returned worth 50*l.* a-year; and the incumbent weak, and a Pluralitan.

In an original roll, dated July 4, 1664, signed Matthew Hale, and on the title "Exonerationes

[1] The workhouse at that time contained 55 persons.

[2] The first line (of which one word is reversed) is probably "Oluuer Bankar;" the second, which makes two on the glass, is "Rose Bynson," and "Luys Blakstyn" (a compound similar to Bens-kin, Manakin, Wat-kin); the third is clearly "aiabs."

[3] Most probably, a vestry, poorly accommodated with one sorry window South-west, and that perhaps darkened with stained glass: it might be a dormitory, or recess suitable to early matins, or vespers. The vestry at present is a boarded inclosure, open at top, at the North corner of the church, by the belfry. W. B.

Decimarum," I find this entry: "Vicar of All Saints, 8*s.* 4*d.*"

In the king's books the vicarage of St. Peter's is stated to be worth, in all its tithes, with a manse, garden, and other annual profits, 2*l.* 8*s.*; and All Saints, in all its vicarial dues, both from great and small tithes, una cum exit' mans', 4*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.*

The clear yearly value is stated to be 15*l.* 12*s.*

The archidiaconal procurations are, 8*s.* 6*d.*

At the West end, near the North door, is placed an old chest, with rings and hinges of uncommon strength, containing the churchwardens' accompts for a considerable number of years, and the originals of the following instruments relative to the union of the churches.

1. The institution of William Rudierd, clerk, to the vicarage of All Saints, on the presentation of the Queen, by John Whitgift, Archbishop of Canterbury, the see of Lincoln being then vacant, dated at Lambeth, 22 May, A. D. 1584, & nostre translationis anno 1°. (Johannes Incent, Registrarius, &c.)

"Johannes, providentiâ divinâ, Cantuariensis archiepiscopus, totius Anglie primas et metropolitanus, ad infrascripta auctoritate Parliamenti Anglie ultimè fulcitus. Dilecto nobis in Christo Willielmo Ruddierd, clerico, vicario ecclesie parochialis Sancti Petri infra villam Leicestrie, dioc' Lincoln', salutem et gratiam. Meritis tue probitatis inducimur ut te spiritualibus favoribus et gratiis prosequamur. Hinc est quod cum nobis pro parte tuâ fuerit jampridem expositum, quod vicaria ecclesie parochialis Sancti Petri predicti, quam in presenti obtines, fuerit et sit, in suis fructibus, oblationibus, et proventionibus, perquam exiles, ut puta ad summam duntaxat XLV solidorum; si vicaria ecclesie parochialis Omnium Sanctorum infra eandem villam ac ejusdem dioc' per te jam obtenta, que etiam eidem ecclesie Sancti Petri contermina et contigua infra unius milliaris spatium constituta est, cujus etiam fructus, oblationes, et proventiones, communi valuatione, summam quatuor librarum per annum non excedunt, uniretur, annecteretur, et incorporaretur, ex hoc commoditati tue plurimùm consuleretur; ac proinde nobis humiliter supplicâsti desiderio tuo in hâc parte clementer prospicere: Nos igitur, tam dictorum beneficiorum proximitatem et contiguitatem, quam fructuum et proventuum eorundem exilitatem et exiguitatem attendentes, tuis in hâc parte supplicationibus favorabiliter inclinati, dictam vicariam ecclesie parochialis Omnium Sanctorum, cum suis juribus et pertinentiis universis, eidem vicarie ecclesie parochialis Sancti Petri, durante tempore incumbentie tue in eâdem ecclesiâ, auctoritate quâ in hâc parte fulcimur, unimus, annectimus, et incorporamus; ita quod benè liceat tibi, prefato Willielmo Ruddierd, dictam vicariam ecclesie parochialis Sancti Petri, una cum eâdem dictâ vicariâ ecclesie parochialis Omnium Sanctorum, unius tantummodò beneficii nomine, insimul quoad vixeris retinere, illarumque redditus, fructus, et proventus, in tuos et ecclesiarum predictarum usus et utilitatem convertere, diocesani loci aut cujusvis alterius licentiâ super hoc minimè requisitâ; constitutionibus, ordinationibus, decretis, sive legibus, aut ceteris quibuscunque in contrarium editis, in aliquo non obstante. Proviso tamen quod dicta vicaria ecclesie parochialis Omnium Sanctorum debitis propterea non fraudetur obsequiis, et animarum cura in eâdem nullatenus negligatur, sed ejusdem congruè supportentur onera debita et consueta. Volumus autem ut he litere tibi non proficiantur, nisi per literas patentes Regie Majestatis debitè fuerint confirmate. Datum sub sigillo ad Facultates, 17° die mensis Maii, A. D. 1584, et nostre translationis anno primo."

To this is annexed a confirmation under the great seal, in the name of the Queen, in the same form of words as above used, dated at Westminster, 21° Maii, 26° regni. This serving for the union of the two parishes during the life of Mr. Rudyard only; in order to the perpetual union of them, the following petition was made:

"Villa Leicestr'. To all' Christian people to whom this presente wrytinge shall come, the maior and burgesses of the town of Leicester, in the county of Leicester, and also William Rudyarde, clerk, vicare perpetual of the said parish of St. Peter's in the said town of Leicester, and of the parish of All Saints in the same town, send greeting in the Lord God everlasting. Whereas the parish church of the said parish of St. Peter's in Leicester aforesaid was many years past utterly decayed, the church and vicaridge house thereof taken down, and nothing thereof remaining, and while it was standing had but the portion of five pounds yerely to the utmost value belonging unto ytt, for the indifferent mayntenance of a mynyster to serve the cure there; and the said parish church of All Saints in the aforesaid town of Leicester, being next thereunto adjoyning, hath also very small mayntenance, being but of the yearly value of eight pounds at the most, the which church of All Saints ys a very fayr, convenyent, and large church, and much cost thereof of late bestowed, whereby yt ys able to receyve the inhabitants of both the said parishes, as ys manifest to the wholl town, where they often doe frequent themselves, to the heyringe of the preachinge of God's most holye worde: In consideration whereof, we the said maior and burgesses of the said town of Leicester, and also I the said William Rudyarde, clerk, vycar perpetual of both the said parishes, have, and by these presents doo give our full, wholl, perfect, and absolute consents and assents, that the said two parishes may be unyted and annexed together into one only church and parish, by the name of 'The parish church of All Saints in Leicester,' according to the statute in that case made and provided. In wytnes whereof, wee the aforesaid maior and burgesses of the town of Leicester have hereunto set our common seal of the same town; and also I the said William Rudyarde, clerk, vycar of both the said parishes, have hereunto sette my seal and subscribed my name. Dated att the town of Leicester aforesaid, the 2d day of February, in the year of the raigne of our sovereign lady Elizabeth the two and thirtieth."

Under this is written:

"And I William [1], by God's permission, Bushop of Lincoln, in consideration of the smalnes of the lyvings of the vicarage of St. Peter's and All Saints in the town of Leicester, and other causes before mentioned, do think it meet and convenient that the said two parishes of St. Peter's and All Saints should be united into one only church and parish, by the name of the parish church of All Saints in Leicester; and in witnes whereof have hereunto set mie hand and seale, 18 Nov. A. D. 1590."

The Queen also signified her consent, by her letters patent following:

"Elizabetha, Dei gratiâ, Anglie, Francie, et Hibernie Regina, fidei defensor, &c. Omnibus ad quos presentes litere pervenerint salutem. Sciatis quod nos, de gratiâ nostrâ speciali, ac ex certâ scientiâ et mero motu nostris, necnon ad humilem petitionem dilectorum subditorum nostrorum, Willielmi Rudyarde, clerici, vicarii perpetui vicariarum ecclesiarum parochialium Sancti Petri et Omnium Sanctorum ville nostre Leicestr', majoris et comburgensium ville predicte, et parochianorum infra parochiam Sancti Petri predicti commorantium et degentium, unioni, incorporationi, et consolidationi vicariarum ecclesie parochialis Sancti Petri predicti, cum suis juribus et pertinentiis universis, nostri juris patronat' existen', vicarie perpetue ecclesie parochialis Omnium Sanctorum, et nostri similiter juris patronat', per reverendum in Christo patrem Lincolnie episcopum, ejus loci ordinarium, fiend', spontè et gratiosè, regalem nostrum consensum pariter et assensum damus et concedimus per presentes; eo quod expressa mencio de certitudine premissorum, sive eorum alicujus, aut de aliis donis sive concessionibus per nos, seu per aliquem progenitorum nostrorum, prefatis Willielmo Rudyarde,

In 1636, an exemplification of the foregoing instruments was obtained from the Bishop of Lincoln, in the following terms:

"Universis et singulis Christi fidelibus ad quos presentes litere nostre testimoniales pervenerint, seu quos infrascripta tangunt vel tangere poterint quomodolibet in futuro. Nos Johannes[1], providentiâ divinâ, Lincolnie episcopus, salutem in Domino sempiternam, ac fidem indubiam presentibus adhiberi. Sciatis quod, scrutato Registro nostro apud Lincolniam fideliter custodito, in libro institutionum tempore domini Willielmi Wickham, quondam episcopi Lincolnie, inter alia ibidem registrata compertum est prout sequitur; viz.

"Junii 1594 decimo septimo, reverendus pater dominus episcopus predictus, vicarius Sancti Petri Leicestrie, vicarius Omnium Sanctorum ibidem, de et cum consensu serenissime principis domine nostre Elizabethe regine, &c. earundem patrone, Willielmi Rudyard, clerici, incumbentis moderni in eisdem, majoris et comburgensium ville Leicestrie, et parochianorum utriusque ecclesie etiam id petentium, &c. vinxit, annexit, et consolidavit, prout per literas suas inde factas pleniùs liquet, sub verborum tenore sequentium:

"Willielmus, permissione divinâ," &c. (as in p. 550, to "decimo," above.)

"In quorum omnium et singulorum premissorum fidem, robur, et testimonium, has literas nostras testimoniales exinde fieri, ac sigillo vicarii nostri in spiritualibus generalis, quo in hâc parte utimur, communiri et corroborari fecimus. Datum Lincolnie, vicesimo septimo die Septembris, anno Domini millesimo sexcentesimo tricesimo sexto.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

On tablets against the North wall of the chancel:

Arms: Sable, on a fess wavy, between three demi-lions rampant Or; a crescent for difference; Plate XXIV. fig. 17.

"This monument is erected to the memory of Matthew Simons, esq. sometime high sheriff of this county, who, for many years before his death, by his known integrity, humility, and charity, did acquire a just esteem and veneration. He gave many generous legacies; as also a sum of 98*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* to charitable uses, yearly for ever; which said sum is yearly paid by his heir and executor John Simons, esq. to whom he gave the remainder of his estate: and from whom (though much artifice was used) nothing could withdraw his affections.
He departed this life June the 19th, anno Domini 1714, ætat. 84."

Arms: Azure, a canton Argent; Pl. XXXVIII. fig. 6.

"Near this place lies interred the body of Mr. John Clarke, late a worthy citizen of London.
His estate (not inconsiderable), acquired by great industry,
he bequeathed with equal piety to the Corporation, for the relief of widows and children of poor clergymen.
He departed this life Oct. 31,
in the year of our Lord 1732.
This monument was erected,
at the expence of the above-mentioned Corporation, in grateful remembrance of so liberal a benefactor."

Against the South wall:

"In memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Watchorn, who died the 18th day of December, 1800,
aged 62 years."

"In memory of John Mason, surgeon, of this Borough, one of the three sons of William and Jane Mason, both deceased.
He departed this life the 25th day of August, 1795,
in the 56th year of his age."

"In memory of John, son of Thomas Watchorn and Ann his wife;
he died May 1, 1800, aged 25 years.
Also of Thomas Watchorn, gent. who died July 27, 1806, aged 56 years."

"In memory of John Watchorn, gent. who died Nov. 25, 1795, aged 74 years;
also of Ann his wife,
daughter of John and Ann Lambert,
who died March 21, 1770, aged 46 years."

"Near this place lies the mortal part of William Dickins, gent.
He died Jan. 14, 1804, in the 75th year of his age.
Ann, the wife of the above William Dickins, gent.
died April 1, 1805, in the 74th year of her age."

On flat stones in the chancel:

"Under this stone
lyeth the body of John Norrice, gent.
the last male of the family of the Norrices.
He left behind him only one daughter;
and died, in the 59th year of his age, July the 29th, anno Dom. 1700."

Arms: Ermine, a saltire . . . . .; a crescent for difference; Plate XXIV. fig. 18.

"Sub hoc saxo depositæ sunt reliquiæ Gulielmi Thomas, A. M. scholæ publicæ hujus burgi per XXXIV annos archididascali, huic parochiæ XXVIII annos sedulò invigilavit. Maturus cœlo feliciter in Christo

"Here lyes the body of the Rev. Mr. John Makepeace, vicar of this parish, who departed this life Feb. 17, 1745-6,
in the 39th year of his age."

"Here lyeth interred the body of Mr. Philip Hackett, who was rector of South Croxton,
in the county of Leicester, confrater of Wigston's Hospital, and vicar of this parish;
who departed this life the 18th day of May,
A. D. 1735, in the 72d year of his age.
Jane his wife was buried here
May 12, 1747, aged 76."

William Brown, May 1, 1783, aged 62. Also Jane Brown his wife, July 1, 1783, aged 75.

On a large wooden framed tablet, hung in the pew next the Mayor's, on the South:

Arms: Per pale, Argent and Gules, a fess Azure; Pl. XXXVIII. fig. 7.

"In this church-yard doth lye the corps
Of William Norrice dead and gone;
Whose grave from all the rest is knowne
By finding out the greatest stone[1]:
A homely tomb, yet grac'd with fame
Of worthy works which he hath done:
A monument which he did choose,
Before his houre-glass was runn.
Thrice fifteen groats he did bestow,
Which yearly ever shall renew,
And to be given to All Saints' poore,
On the feast-day of Barthol'mew:
O happy All Saints, that hath bredd
Such Saints on earth to feed thy poore;
Let Saints in Heaven and earth below
Give prayses to the Lord therefore.
Five marks he gave unto the schoole,
An annuall stipend for to bee;
And that it shall be yearly payd
To the second master of the three.
Twice was he grac'd with serving twice
The office of the maioraltye.
Three wives he had, and had his will
To be entomb'd amongst them three:
But Death, the end of flesh and blood,
Did wound to death the good old man.
Though ninety-six years liv'd on earth,
Yet was his life in length a spann.
He departed this life January the 8th, 1615."

In the nave, on flat stones:

The tomb of Thomas Newcomb, marked by the bells, still remains, robbed of its brasses, near the pulpit stairs; Plate XXXVIII. fig. 5.

John Watchorn, Aug. 1, 1742, aged 55.

In one of the West windows is a small modern painting, which represents Jesus Christ surrounded with a Glory, and pointing with his left hand to a label, on which is written, See that ye love one another. On a cloud which descends nearly to the bottom of the Glory are figures of Cherubim.

Below is a figure of the Virgin to the knees, with a Glory round the head; then appears a drapery, and under it an Angel, blowing a trumpet.

Beneath is this inscription:

"Under this glass painting lies interred the body of John Langton.
He died May 13, 1743, aged 13."

At the West end of the church, on mural stones:

"Near this place lieth interred the body of William Johnson, March 4, 1742, aged 32.

In this church was formerly a stone thus inscribed:

"Here lyeth interred the body of Joseph Wright,
a gardener; who changed this life for a better,
March 20, 1678-9.
My Mother Earth, though mystically curst,
Hath me, her son, most bountifully nurst;
For all my pains, and seed on her I sow'd,
A blessed crop she has on me bestow'd;
Out of which store that I of her received,
My painfull wantfull brethren I relieved.
And though this Mother I full well did love,
I better lov'd my Father that's above:
My Mother feeds my body for a space,
My soul for aye beholds my Father's face."

In the church-yard.

On the South-east side of an altar-tomb, near the South-east angle of the church:

"In memory of Gabriel Newton, gentleman,
one of the aldermen, and once mayor of the Borough of Leicester, who died the 26th of October, 1762, aged 78 years[1]. By his first wife, Elizabeth daughter of Mr. Alderman Wells, he had several children, which all died in their minority. By his second wife, Mary daughter of George Bent, gentleman, he had George Newton, who died the 8th of March, 1746, in the 18th year of his age. By his last wife, Eleanor daughter of John Bakewell, gent.
of Normington on the Heath, he had no issue."

On the North-west side of the same tomb:

"Mr. Alderman Newton, in his life-time, by deeds of trust, charged several of his estates

[1] "Leicester, Oct. 28, 1762. Tuesday died Alderman Gabriel Newton, in the 79th year of his age. He was mayor of this Corporation in the year 1732. The greatest part of his fortune is left in trust to the Corporation, for educating children of poor housekeepers. In this town, 35; at Ashby de la Zouch, 25; at Earl Shilton, 20; at Northampton, St. Neots, Hertford, Huntingdon, Bedford, and Buckingham, each 25. It is computed that he has left, in lands and money for supporting this charity, to the value of 14,000l. and upwards; most of which he settled in his life-time, in pursuance of the Mortmain act. And last night his corpse was interred in All Saints church-yard. The funeral was attended by eight Clergymen, the Mayor, Aldermen, Town-Clerk, and Chamberlains, in their formalities, &c. The great mace, covered with black crape, was carried before the Mayor; the four Serjeants with their maces, and other Officers, following." London Evening Post, Nov. 4, 1762.

On the West side:

"Mary Simpson, daughter of Abstinence Poughfer, esq.
and widow of John Simpson, esq.
died the 28th of February, 1774, aged 68 years.
Thou most esteem'd, most honour'd, most rever'd,
Accept this tribute to your merit due;
Nor blame me if, by each fond tie endear'd,
I bring again your virtues into view.
This awful scene your mem'ry shall restore,
Here oft for thee the silent tear be shed;
Belov'd, till gratitude can feel no more,
And mourn'd, till filial piety be dead."

Fig. 9. in Plate XXXVIII. represents a Roman urn, of red clay, in the possession of the Rev. James Pigott, found at the depth of nine feet, in digging for the foundation of the new County Gaol.

Fig. 10. is a fragment of Roman pottery, found in the Town-ditch in 1793; the original of which, if whole, would form a circle within of nine inches and a half.

Fig. 11. is the fragment of a wrought stone, found at the same time and place.

Fig. 12. shews the North Bridge, commonly called St. Sunday's Bridge, an elegant stone structure, finished in the summer of 1796; the old Bridge having been nearly destroyed by a great flood in February 1795. "When viewed from the Abbey Meadows below, this Bridge forms, with the trees and slopes beyond it, a very pleasing scene. Its three arches are small segments of a larger circle. At the foot of this Bridge, in an area inclosed by a low wall, and distinguished by a few scattered grave-stones, the church-yard of St. Leonard's (p. 321) meets the eye[2]."

SAINT MARGARET'S.

This parish is very extensive, but consists entirely of Suburbs; amongst which are the Belgrave[3] and Humberston[4] gates[5].

Last Sunday, 25 poor children of the town, who was cloathed and educated by Gabriel Newton, one of the aldermen of the town of Leicester, went in procession to St. Paul's church in the above town, with their worthy donor before them, where was a great congregation; and an anthem was by the children, &c. sung in the organ-gallery. After which the donor, &c. had a decent entertainment, at a place appointed for their reception."

[2] Walk through Leicester, p. 44.

[3] See p. 532. In this street (leading to Loughborough), which is of considerable extent, is placed the famous Milliare which has been amply described in p. clv.; "an object which exhibits a curious instance of the civilization introduced by the Roman arms into this Island; for the erection of marks to denote the distance from place to place is an accommodation, at least to the travelling stranger, which unpolished Nations never devised; and which the inhabitants of Britain never generally enjoyed from the final departure of the Roman legions till the last century, when mile-stones were again erected along our principal turnpike-roads. The situation in which this stone is at present placed has often been thought improper; for it is undoubtedly exposed to injuries from the wantonness of play; and is so little conspicuous from its place in the obelisk, that nothing appears necessarily to attract the attention of the stranger. A situation more private, though not wholly so, would be more proper; such a one as the garden of the Infirmary would afford: it would there have all the publicity the curious could wish, and all the security the Antiquary could desire. —The visitor, continuing his walk along this street, which, as he probably will know, is on the great road from the Metropolis to the North-west part of the kingdom, arrives at a scene of busy traffick. Here, among numbers of newly-erected dwellings (proofs of the increasing population of the Town), is the public and principal wharf on the navigable Canal, near which is an iron foundery. This Canal (see p. clxvii.) was formed, in consequence of a bill passed in 1791, for the purpose of opening a communication with the Loughborough canal, and through that, with the various navigations, united to the Trent." Walk through Leicester, pp. 8—11.

[4] See p. 532. This street, which, passing by a range of new and handsome buildings, leads to Uppingham, is part of the manor possessed by the Bishops of Lincoln in the twelfth century, and is still called The Bishop's Fee. [See p. 567.]

[5] I cannot better describe the boundaries than in the quaint, but accurate description given me by the late Mr. Bickerstaff: "St. Margaret's consists entirely of Suburbs. It reaches from near St. Sunday's Bridge, on the North side of the street, All Saints ex adverso; and it parallels with it through the Sanby Gate, or Sancta via Gate, as it leads to St. Margaret's church; thence bending by an acute angle to the Church Gate, its Liberty; thence entering the Coal Hill, it branches into the Belgrave Gate and Humberston Gate; but, passing through the Coal Hill and Gallow Tree Gate, it still claims the off-side the street. Being now opposite St. Martin's side, it still continues, by house or field, till it takes in a groupe of houses, from the Hangman's Lane fronting the Magazine, to the Mill-stone Lane near the South Gate, a mile in extent, here opposite St. Mary's side of the street. From the North Gate, the continuation, under the title of North Gate Street, to St. Sunday's Bridge, is at least a quarter of a mile, besides the branches immediately on the opposite end of St. Sunday's Bridge towards the fields, which constitute St. Leonard's parish, and are called, that which runs W. W. by S. the "Wood Gate;" that on the N. N. by E. the "Abbey Gate," leading to the Abbey, whose brick wall begins near its extremity."

In 1564, there were 164 families in St. Margaret's, and 17 in Knighton.

In an indenture dated 1702, Mrs. Brown's house and yard is said to be situated between Frier-lane on the North, and Millstone-lane on the South, and Double-gate-lane towards the East, &c.[3]

The workhouse of this parish was thus described in 1724:

"The person who had the chief management of this workhouse tells me, that, before the building of the parish houses in 1714, they paid above 30*l. per annum* rent for the poor, and that the whole charge on the poor was about 300*l. per annum*; for defraying which, they levied 4*s.* in the pound rent. For building the houses, they borrowed 240*l.* and reduced their levies from 4*s.* to 3*s.* 4*d.*; by which levies so reduced, they paid off the 240*l.* in five years. About 1720, the poor began to increase again; so that there was little or no further abatement in their levies. In 1723, they borrowed 200*l.* for making alterations and additional buildings to the parish-houses built 1714; as a working-room, a kitchen, cellar, a pump, and other conveniences, for turning them into a workhouse, which, he believes, will save the parish two-thirds of their former levies. Before the setting up the workhouse, the weekly payments to the poor were 3*l.* 5*s.* or thereabouts, besides by-bills, as they are called, which often amounted to 1*l.* or 1*l.* 10*s.* more; but since then, he supposes that 1*s.* 4*d.* in the pound will defray their charge; nevertheless they at present levy more, in order to pay off the 200*l.* which they borrowed. The salary of the master, the number of the poor in the workhouse, and orders of management, are much the same as in St. Martin's parish, saving that they trust the master himself to buy the provisions. They have bought about 11 ton of coals, to serve the house for the year current, and allow two strike of malt for a hogshead of beer; and the poor have hot meat three times a week[4]."

In 1764 an act was passed, for dividing and inclosing three several common and open fields, lying within the parish of St. Margaret, near the Borough of Leicester, called Saint Margaret's Fields, distinguished or known by the several names of The Conduit Field, Middle Field, and The Nether Field, and estimated and computed to contain together about 34 yard lands, besides four yard lands or thereabouts of glebe-land, and also certain meadows or pieces of lammas-ground adjoining or lying near to the said common and open fields, and called by the several names of The Abbey Meadow, Dent's

Meadow, Palmer's Leroe[1], and Valentine's Leroe. In this act, lord William Manners is described as lord of the manor of the said three common and open fields called Saint Margaret's Fields, and also as seised of 18 yard lands or thereabouts within the same fields, part of the said 34 yard lands; and the Reverend Andrew Burnaby, clerk, prebendary of St. Margaret in Leicester, in Lincoln, in right of his said prebend, as seised of the perpetual advowson, right of patronage and presentation of, in, and to, the vicarage church of St. Margaret, and of all the tithes in kind of corn, grain, hay, wool, and lamb, arising and issuing out of the said three common and open fields and meadows, and also of the said four yard lands of glebe-lands lying dispersed in the said common and open fields; which said tithes and glebe-land were held by Ambrose Saunders, late of Stoke Golding, in the said county of Leicester, but now of Haselbeech, in the county of Northampton, esquire, under a lease for three lives from the said Andrew Burnaby; yet nevertheless as to the said four yard lands of glebe-land in trust for Mary Needham, spinster: And lord William Manners, the Rev. Andrew Burnaby, Ambrose Saunders, esq. together with the Mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the Borough of Leicester, George Coulton the elder, clerk, Richard Hill, John Willows, Joseph Cradock, Alice Loe, and others, were then owners and proprietors of all the lands and grounds within the same fields; and the inhabitants within the said parish of St. Margaret, who pay levies and taxes to the said parish, though they have not any lands in the said fields, had, time immemorial, enjoyed a right of common over and upon the said open fields and Dent's meadow, jointly with the proprietors thereof respectively, from the open tide, or the time the harvest in the said fields is got in, until the 11th day of December in every year. An allotment to be made in the first place to those entitled under the prebendary to the four yard lands of glebe; and then a plot to be set out, for the use of the inhabitants of the parish paying taxes and levies (exclusive of the proprietors of the open fields), equivalent to their right of common, and to be vested in the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and by them to be annually let or disposed of on Easter Tuesday, and the profits to be applied as the majority at the parish-meeting should annually direct; and the residue of the land to be proportionably divided. The allotment in lieu of one quarter of a yard land, held by the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, for the use of the Old Hospital on the Newark, to be paid without expence to the charity. A yearly rent to be allotted to the lessee of the glebe for the term of his lease, and in reversion to the prebendary, of 110*l*. out of the common fields; another rent of 50*s*. out of Dent's Meadow, and 15*s*. out of Palmer's Leroc in lieu of all tithes and compensation for corn grain, hay, wool, and lamb, and other tithes whatsoever. Provision is made for preserving for general use a conduit in the fields, which for time immemorial had been in the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of Leicester, situated in a close in the tenure of Mr. James Bishop of the Three Crowns Inn; and for preserving the post roads from Loughborough, through Leicester, to Harborough, and from Uppingham to Leicester.

The Return made to Parliament in 1786, in answer to an enquiry respecting the charitable donations in this parish, may be seen in vol. I. p. 122.

On a tablet in the church:

"DONATIONS to the poor of this Parish.

"Mr. Robert Heyrick, late an alderman of Leicester, gave 40*s*. per annum for ever, to be paid into the hands of the mayor and justices of Leicester, to be by them distributed on St. Thomas's day, to 40 poor widows of the said Borough, 1*s*. each, 20 whereof to be of St. Martin's parish; the rest to be at the discretion of the mayor and justices. This gift began in 1618. The same Mr. Heyrick gave also by his last will 5*l*. per annum to be distributed at Candlemas, by the mayor and justices of the Borough of Leicester, amongst the poor of their several parishes, St. Leonard's included; which sum being delivered in bread by the mayor and justices to the minister and churchwardens of every several parish, they to distribute the same. This also began in 1618.

Elizabeth countess of Devon gave 50*l*. wherewith was purchased land of the yearly value of 3*l*.; of which 3*l*. twenty shillings to be given to the poor of the parish of St. Leonard's; the other forty shillings to be paid yearly, by the mayor and justices of the Borough of Leicester, to the minister and churchwardens, or overseers of the poor of the several parishes in Leicester, upon Thursday before Easter-day, and by them to be distributed at discretion. This gift began in 1628.

A house given at Loughborough; the yearly rent, now 28*l*. per annum, to be paid to the overseers of the poor of St. Margaret, 5*l*. of which to be given to the minister; the rest to be given to the poor of the said parish, half at Michaelmas, the other at Lady-day.

Gave by Hugh Botham, gent. deceased, 6*s*. 8*d*. to be paid to the minister and churchwardens, either three days before Christmas, or three days before Easter-day, to be by them distributed to the poor of the said parish, at their discretion.

By order of a common hall held for the Borough of Leicester, the chamberlains are to deliver to the ministers and churchwardens of St. Margaret's, either three days before New Year's day, or three days before Whit-Sunday, in bread 10*s*. 8*d*.

Mr. Barrage gave 1*l*. yearly for ever, to be paid out of the rents and profits of an orchard, now the property of Mr. Thomas Yates, in Belgrave-gate.

Catharine, wife of Samuel Holmes, gave by her last will 30 chaldron of pit coals, to be paid out of the rents and profits arising from the house now occupied by Thomas Wheatley, known by the sign of the Black Lion, Belgrave-gate; the said coals to be distributed by the owner or occupier, with the overseers of St. Margaret's, amongst the people dwelling in the Cock-muck-hill houses, upon Christmas-day, five chaldrons each, yearly for ever.

John Bass, esq. gave by his last will 5*l*. to be laid out in pit-coal, and given to the poor of St. Margaret's, the day before Christmas, for ever."

Over the Poor-houses:

"The Corporation of Leicester, and Thomas Chamberlain of the same place, gent. gave 50*l*. each to remove the six poors' houses, called The Cock-muck-hill, out of Belgrave-gate upon this spot. The residue of the money (which amounted to . . . . .[3]) was raised by a voluntary subscription of the parishioners.—Mrs. Catharine Holmes gave 500 weight of coals to the occupier of each house on St. Thomas's day yearly for ever. This donation was charged upon a house in Belgrave-gate, now the property of Mr. Thomas Wheatly; who has paid a certain sum of money into the hands of the parish-officers of St. Margaret's; and they have engaged, gaged, in behalf of the parish, that the said coals shall in future be provided by them."

"The following rules and orders are to be strictly observed by the inhabitants of these houses.

"If any of them behave disorderly, or use any ill language to the churchwardens and overseers (who are invested with the appointment of these places), for the first offence will be severely reprimanded, and for the second will be expelled the premisses by a majority of the parish officers, and be incapacitated from enjoying any privilege or emolument as may arise from the charity; and they are strictly prohibited from taking in any lodgers or inmates. When any of the windows are broken, the occupiers shall repair them at their own expence. On neglecting so to do, when called upon, the parish officers will give directions to have them made good, and the charge of so doing will be stopped off their yearly coals.

"John Brewin and Mark Oliver, churchwardens.

"Robert Clarke, J. P. Allamand, Collwell Langdon, and Edward Swann, overseers. Anno 1782."

The CHURCH (Plates XXXIX. XL. and XLI.)

consists of a lofty tower, three spacious ailes, and a chancel, answering the nave, all which are leaded.

"St. Margarete's is thereby the fairest paroche church of Leircester, wher ons was cathedrale chirch, and therby the bisshop of Lincoln had a palace, wherof a litle yet standith. John Peny, first abbate of Leircester, then bisshop of Bangor and Cairluel, is here buried in an alabaster tumbe. This Penny made the new bricke workes of Leicester abby, and much of the brick walles[1]."

This church may still deserve the character of being "the fairest parish-church in Leicester[2]."

This structure is rendered venerable by its tower (36 yards high), whose battlements, pinacles, and trefoil-work, with the niche, or tabernacle, on the corner of the South wall of the church, would have even shewn it to have been the work of the æra of the regular gothic, had not its date been confirmed by the Register of Bishop Alnwyke, fol. 48: "Commissio domini episcopi ad levandum le Smoke-farthen, alias dict' Lincoln farthing, à nostris archidiaconatûs nostri subditis, ad utilitatem nostre matricis ecclesie Lincolnie cathedralis, sponse nostre, convertendum dict' Smoke farthings, concedentur ad constructionem campanilis ecclesie prebendalis Sancte Margarete, Leycestr', A. D. 1444[3]."

Under the tower is a deep well.

Both within and without the church there are still visible marks remaining of this grand repair; and, what is particularly remarkable, the Gothic arches on the two sides of the nave are not uniform.

From the tower[4], a ring of ten large bells, well known for their excellence, sounds its frequent peals of harmony along the meadow and river below.

On eight of the bells[5] are these inscriptions:

I. A[braham] R[udhall]. 1711.
II. Proſperity to all our Benefactors. 1711.
III. Crede, reſipiſce, diſce mori. 1633.
IV. Iheſu Nazarene, Rex Iudeorum, fili Dei, miſerere mei, 1633.
V. Morte beata nihil beatius. 1633.
VI. Statutum eſt omnibus ſemel mori. 1633.
VII. Feare God, obaie the King. George Palmer. 1633.
VIII. Cum ſono, ſi non vis adire, nunquam ad Preces capias ire. 1633.

Originally there were but six, placed there by Hugh Watts, once mayor of Leicester; to which two were added in 1633; and two more in 1741, by William Fortrey, esq. of Norton by Galby, who was the patron and director of the founder, Thomas Eayre of Kettering, and paid the whole charge of the new bells, and a great part of that of new hanging the old ones[6].

The inside of the church is handsome; the nave and side ailes are supported by gothic arches, whose beauty and symmetry are not concealed by awkward galleries.

In the chancel, on each side of the high altar, is a large niche, beautifully carved, and formerly, no doubt, as beautifully painted.

In that on the North side, as the tradition goes, stood the image of the Blessed Virgin Mary. At her feet Robert Bossu earl of Leicester (who built part of this church), kneeling, and praying to her: whose figure being yet entire, for the oddness and singularity, is here annexed, Plate XLI. fig. 5. The rim of his cap and belt have so natural an appearance of iron and its rust, that the deception will not yield to the closest inspection. He is recumbent, and rests his head upon his left hand, partly inserted under his cap; his sheathed sword under him, the hilt towards his head; one heel, his right, the only one in sight, upwards, or he could not have been contained in the bottom of the niche; his back to the East; his head to the South; on the left side of the communion-table in the approach. He is 20 inches long.

In that on the South side stood the image of St. Margaret. At her feet a lion couchant; fig. 6.

Near the altar, on the left, is a loop-hole, or confessionary, opening into the vestry.

In the first window on the left, on entering the chancel from the church, is "St. Amb."

The opposite or South-east window has a groupe of human figures, strangely collected, and stuck together, all very plump[7].

The present altar-piece is lofty; formed of good carving and wainscot. In the middle a large painting of Cherubim, the Commandments, Creed, and Pater-noster, set off with pilasters and other ornaments; all which are preserved from dust with large curtains of scarlet.

[2] "It is to be observed of this, and the other churches in this place, that the entrance is by a descent of several steps; a circumstance proving incontestibly that the ground without has been considerably raised, since no reason could induce the founders of these sacred edifices to sink the floors beyond the natural level; nor is the surface of the church-yards alone, higher than the floors of the churches; so caused by the continued interment of the dead: but the general level of the pavements of the streets is also higher; from which it must be inferred, that the ground on which the present houses are built has been every where raised, and that very considerably." Walk through Leicester, pp. 16, 17.

[4] This tower gives a noble appearance to Leicester, from the Abbey Meadows and Birstall hill; and is a fine lofty pile of strength, symmetry, and beauty.

[5] "The antient six bells at St. Margaret's, cast by the famous Watts, are increased to ten, which are almost the best peal of that number in the kingdom. There is an anecdote of the first of these six bells not a little extraordinary, as well as true, which I picked up by tradition when a boy, and enquired afterwards into its validity: When the metal and moulds of the bells were preparing, and almost finished for casting, the son would have his father go to London, to hear the best-toned tenor he could before they put-to the final hand. The father went up accordingly at the son's request; who set to work, without loss of time, immediately after his father's departure. He cast the great bell, which did not completely please him; he re-cast it; and, finding it had every qualification he wished for, he then wrote to his father in town, to come upon a certain day in the following week; nay, even a certain hour. The father could not make out what his son meant by being so particular; however, he obeyed him. The son, upon casting a second tenor which so fully answered all his wishes and expectations, set to work to hang it; and, at the critical minute the father was to approach the town of Leicester on his return, this inimitable great bell was ringing, to the no small joy of the father, who cried also; for he guessed, and knew, what the younger Watts had been at, and contrived, as there could be no such bell in existence at the time he left his foundery: (the ninth, which is now in St. Margaret's steeple, being equally as fine-toned; nay, some say better). These six hindmost bells were cast about 1629. The two trebles in the present ten were cast by Mr. Eayre of Kettering, one of the first of this occupation in his time, and a person of great ingenuity, as well as property. About 1741, the peal of ten were made complete." This note is by the late Reverend Philip Hackett.

On the South side remain three fine stone-seats and a piscina, Plate XXXIX. fig. 1.

Another piscina is in the South aile; fig. 2.

The font is given in fig. 3.

On the roof of the nave is carved the bust of a man, with two other smaller heads standing under it; and along a beam runs an inscription somewhat to this purpose:

Theis are iman bothe that theis
That janglyne in tyme of god servis
Loke how bright our howse and praty
In wyth my sillwas by me holde.

Mr. Burton notices only one coat of arms here:

Gules, ten bezants, Zouch; fig. 4.

Under Mr. Charles Horton, late master of the society of singers here, the barbarous custom of rustic psalmody in these parts gave way to a more cultivated taste; and the parishioners, with a laudable spirit, have erected, by subscription among themselves, a handsome organ, which was finished in 1773; the charge for erecting which, and placing it in the church, was 409*l.* 17*s.* 8½*d.*

The church is also ornamented by an elegant brass chandelier, with twelve branches above, and twelve below, pendent from the roof of the nave, and opposite the reading-desk; the gift of John Bass, esq. in 1754.

When all the other churches in Leicester were settled upon the Abbot and his monks, in proprios usus, this escaped, as not belonging to the Earl, but to the Bishops of Lincoln, who annexed it as a prebend to the Cathedral of Lincoln.

The right of presentation is vested in the person holding the prebend; and the parish, with the neighbouring dependant parish of Knighton, is exempted from the jurisdiction of the Archdeacon of Leicester.

In the Matriculus of 1220, St. Margaret's church is described to be under the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln, and as a prebend of that Cathedral [1].

The endowment of the vicarage is here given, from an attested copy taken in 1736.

"Ordinatio vicarie ecclesie Sancte Margarette Leicestrie, 1276.

"Walterus de Bornington presbyter, presentatus per magistrum Rogerum archidiaconum Leycestrie, prebendarium Sancte Margarette de eâdem, ad vicariam dicte prebende per nos ordinandam, que in portionibus subscriptis ordinata existit, factâ prius inquisitione per decanum et capitulum Lincolnie; per quam acceptum est, et etiam ad ipsam est admissus 14 calendarum Aprilis, anno 19°, et cum honore residendi in ipsâ perpetuus vicarius canonicè institutus in eâdem, juratâque episcopo canonicâ obedientiâ in formâ consuetâ, scriptum fuit decano et capitulo quod ipsum, &c.

"Est autem forma ordinationis vicarie talis:

"Ordinamus autem vicariam dicte prebende in omnibus oblationibus in pecuniâ que ad ecclesiam pertinent ordinandam, cum oblatione candelarum in die Purificationis, et aliis oblationibus que in candelis et cereis in purificationibus, et cum corporibus presentibus diversis vicibus obvenerint ad eandem; necnon pane altaris, et ovis, et in sex marcis annuis per manus prebendarii vicario qui pro tempore fuerit solvendis ibidem terminis subscriptis; (viz.) in festo Sancti Michaelis duabus marcis, in festo Pasche duabus marcis, et in festo Beati Petri ad Vincula duabus marcis, una cum terrâ dicte ecclesie appropriatâ que jacet in Lethepol croftis, quam exnunc dicte vicarie, et item cum omnimodis proventibus altaris capelle de Knighton, que ad dictam ecclesiam pertinet, salvis prebendario decimis lane, agnorum, et vivis mortuariis pro defunctis. Injungimus autem prebendario, quod de manso competenti, ab omni seculari servitio libero, et hâc vice sufficienter edificato, citra festum Sancti Michaelis vicario provideat memorato. Deserviet verò vicarius per se, cum socio sacerdote, diacono, et clerico ecclesie Beate Marie Margarette presentato, et capelle de Knighton per idoneum sacerdotem sumptibus suis; eo excepto, quod diacono et clerico ultra consuetas oblationes, in duplicibus festis, et in diebus dominicis, et in corporibus presentibus pro quibus fuerint oblationes, nihil ministrabit. Inveniet merus vicarius totum luminare in cancello, tam ad libros quam ad altare; videlicet, novem cereos ad magnum altare super herliis in festis consuetis, et duos cereos supra altare furos, et alios duos processionales, et unam lampadem in cancello. Libros et ornamenta ecclesie sustinebit et reparabit, et locricibus vestimentorum. Stipendia ministrabit, ac extraordinaria onera pro suâ ratâ agnoscet; et nihil aliud preter officium divinum requiretur ab ipso. Prebendarius verò omnia alia onera ordinaria et extraordinaria pro suâ ratâ agnoscet et sustentabit.

"Instantiâ magistri Rogeri de Saxenhirst, prebendarii ecclesie Sancte Margarette Leicestrie, et Roberti de Hereby vicarii ejusdem ecclesie Sancte Margarette, et consensu capituli ecclesie Lincolnie precedentibus, 4 non' Julii, anno Domini 1284, apud Ulfescroft, mutata fuit ordinatio dicte vicarie in hoc; quod vicarius qui pro tempore fuerit omnimodam decimam curtilagiorum habebit, in recompensationem sex marcarum annuarum quas percipere consuevit à prebendario prenotato, et habuit dictus vicarius super hoc literam patentem sub hâc formâ:

"Universis, &c. Oliverus, &c. Noverit universitas vestra quod nos literas bone memorie quondam domini Ricardi predecessoris nostri, in mediocri super ordinatione vicarie in ecclesiâ prebendali Sancte Margarette Leicestrie, inspeximus sub hâc formâ:

"Ricardus, miseratione divina, Lincolnie episcopus, dilectis in Christo filiis Olivero decano et capitulo Lincolnie salutem, gratiam, et benedictionem. Quod dilectum in Christo filium Walterum de Bornington presbyterum ad vicariam prebendalis ecclesie Sancte Margarette Leicestrie, in subscriptis portionibus per nostram ordinationem consistentem admisimus, ipsumque cum onere personaliter residendi in eâ perpetuum vicarium canonicè instituimus in eâdem. Vobis mandamus quatenus corporalem possessionem dicte vicarie prefato Waltero tanquam vicario habere faciatis in formâ prenotatâ. Ordinamus antem," &c. [ut supra ex aliâ parte rotuli de verbo ad verbum.] Verumque suggerentibus nobis dilectis in Christo filiis magistro Rogero de Saxenhirst archidiacono Leicestrie, prebendarioque ecclesie Sancte Margarette predicte, ac magistro Roberto de Kerby diacono, per nos ad eandem vicariam de novo admisso, quod tam prebendario quam vicario, certis de causis, expediret non modicum decimas croftorum seu curtilagiorum dicte vicarie, in recompensationem dictarum sex marcarum annuarum, assignari, et ipsum prebendarium ab onere presentationis hujus relevari, quod et per nos fieri eorum uterque cum instantiâ postulavit: Nos, ponderatis oneribus ponderandis in hoc facto, prefatas decimas croftorum et curtilagiorum totius parochie ecclesie predicte, sive de leguminibus, sive de quibuscunque aliis qualitercunque proveniant, prefate vicarie de cetero assignamus, et auctoritate pontificali ordinamus; et de dictâ peractione annuâ sex marcarum, de utriusque partis assensu expresso, prebendarium imperpetuum pro se et suis successoribus exoneramus et absolvimus antedictum. In cujus rei testimonium, sigillum nostrum presentibus est appensum. Datum apud Ulfescroft, 4° non' Julii, anno Domini 1284°, et Pontificatûs nostri quinto [2]."

Jan. 20, 1428. Robert Bytham, rector of Norton Twycross in this county, had leave from his patrons, the prior and convent of Belvoir, to exchange with sir William Gilbert, vicar of St. Margaret's [3].

Christian, wife of Richard Grenville, in Henry the Sixth's time, by her will (in Latin), orders her body to be buried in St. Mary's chapel, within the prebendal church of St. Margaret at Leicester[1].

[3] Mr. Peck, from the MSS. at Belvoir.

In the time of Henry VII. Church Ales were very frequent. When they made collections for poor, or for church repairs, a kind of treat was given.

A. D. 1498. Received at the Church Ale, on the Sunday next before the Assumption, 17*s.* 5*d.*; and on the Assumption, 2*s.* 7½*d.*

Paid, for bread and flesh for the Church Ale, 4*s.*

Ditto, on our Lady Day Assumption, 2*d.*

Received, at the Church Ale holden of St. Bartholomew's eve, 38*s.* 1*d.*

Paid, for powder, beef, and cheese, 10*d.*

1513. They had a calf cost 2*s.* 4*d.* and three calves' heads and a ewe cost 8*d.*

In 1525, a calf cost 3*s.* 8*d.*; and for their breakfasts, three calves' heads and two plucks, &c. dressing, fire, and other things, 4*d.*

In 1534, the value of the prebend of St. Margaret's, then held by Master Doctor Dudley, was 33*l.* The Vicar Choral of Lincoln had from the church an annual payment of 2*l.*

The stipend of Thomas Nelson, vicar, was 17*l.*; and the King had an annual payment of 2*s.* 10½*d.*

In the Visitation of Dr. John White, Bishop of Lincoln, under the authority of a mandate from Cardinal Pole, it is thus, inter alia, reported: "Thomas More in Ecclesiâ parochiali Divi Martini Leicestrie, ac post etiam in Ecclesiâ Dive Margarete, xxi° die Aprilis 1556, coram nobis comparuit, et multas Hereses defendit; dicens inter cetera: "This is my faith, that in the Sacrament of the Altar is not the body of Christ; no more than if I myself should give one a piece of bread, and say, Take, eat, this is my body; meaning my own body within my doublet." Unde sententia contra ipsum lata. Scriptum est ad Dominem Regem et Reginam: Et per Breve De Heretico comburendo, apud Leicester predict', mense Junii fuit combustus[2]."

The PREBEND of ST. MARGARET, consists of the impropriation and advowson of St. Margaret's parish in the town of Leicester, where antiently stood the episcopal see of Leicester.

The value of the prebend in 1534 was 27*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*

The following Prebendaries have been successively Proprietors and Patrons of this Church.

John de Winton, 1236.

Roger de Saxenhirst, Archdeacon of Leicester about 1274, and Prebendary in 1276, presented Walter de Bornington to the vicarage.

Roger de Martival (afterwards Bishop of Salisbury), being collated in 1294 to this prebend and the archdeaconry of Leicester, accepted the archdeaconry, but quitted the prebend.

John Maunsell, collated to it 2 cal. Julii, 1295, occurs in 1301 and 1325.

Adam de Limbergh died possessed of it 1339, and was succeeded by Comenges, a Roman Cardinal, 1339; who held it 1343.

John de Edyngton, 12 cal. Jan. 1349; he exchanged it, 13 cal. Nov. 1366, with John de Appelby, Prebendary of Chamberleyneswode in the church of St. Paul, London; who held it 1380.

Thomas Brightwell, Dean of Leicester college; on whose death, in 1390, Thomas Bennet[2], LL.D. succeeded, being installed Nov. 21, 1390.

Richard Younge, LL.B. was installed July 18, 1391. In 1399, he was made Bishop of Bangor.

Thomas More was presented to it by the King, June 23, 1399; and died 1421, being Dean of St. Paul's cathedral, London, where he was buried, without any inscription to his memory.

Thomas Barnesley was collated 1421, on More's death; and quitted it, being Archdeacon of Leicester.

Reginald Kentwode held it 1437. He died 1441, being Dean also of London; and was buried by his predecessor Dean More, without any monument.

John Walpole died in May 1445, possessed of it.

William Biconell succeeded 1445, and died 1477. His successor was John Wardhall, LL.D. collated Nov. 7, 1477, on Biconell's death.

Roger Rotherham, Archdeacon of Rochester, was collated July 17, 1472, and quitted it the same year.

John Blackhall, M.A. succeeded, being installed Nov. 14, 1472.

Geffry Simeon quitted it, 1485, for the Chancellorship of Lincoln.

Simon Stallworth was collated Aug. 11, 1485, on Simeon's resignation.

Robert Momey was collated March 18, 1492, on Stallworth's quitting it the same year.

John Cotteler was collated March 28, 1492, on the resignation of Momey. He was also Treasurer.

Robert Moine was Prebendary in 1501.

Richard Dudley, M.A. was collated March 30, 1507, on Cotteler's resignation.

Henry Morgan, LL.D. was presented by the King, with the consent of the Bishop; and was collated June 7, 1536, on Dudley's death. He was preferred to the see of St. David's 1554; and deprived by Queen Elizabeth 1559.

Thomas Todde held it about 1559.

John Londe, LL.B. was installed into it April 20, 1560; as was John Robinson, Precentor, installed July 9, 1581. He died in 1597, and was buried at Somersham, co. Huntingdon, where he was rector.

George Eland, afterwards Chancellor of Lincoln, enjoyed it March 8, 1603-4. He resigned it 1605.

Richard Clayton, S.T.P. Master of St. John's college, Cambridge, was collated to it Jan. 22, 1605-6. He died in 1612, being also Dean of Peterborough, and Archdeacon of Lincoln.

Thomas Turner, S.T.B. rector of Stokehammond, Bucks, succeeded, being installed Aug. 23, 1612. He was afterward Dean of Canterbury; and died Oct. 8, 1672, aged 81.

John Walcot, M.A. was installed into it July 26, 1618, on Turner's resignation. He died about 1660, being rector of Keyston, co. Huntingdon.

Nathanael Ward was installed Oct. 20, 1660; and died possessed of it 1668.

Edward Boteler, M.A. installed Oct. 12, 1668, on Ward's death. He died in 1670, and was buried at Wintringham, co. Lincoln, where he was rector. His successor was

Nicholas Stratford[3], S.T.P. installed April 7, 1670. He mas made Bishop of Chester in 1689, and succeeded by John Gostling, M.A. installed Oct. 26, 1689. He was chaplain to his Majesty, one of the priests of the Royal Chapel, subdean of St. Paul's, a minor canon of the cathedrals of Canterbury and London, rector of All Saints Hope, and vicar of Littlebourn, in Kent. He died July 17, 1733.

Thomas Geary, M.A. 1733.

Andrew Burnaby[4], M.A. 1737; Prebendary and Vicar. He was also rector of Asfordby.

Robert Burnaby, LL.B. younger brother to the Archdeacon; died April 2, 1807.

—— Palmer, 1807; the present Prebendary, 1810.

The style of office is, "Prebendary of the prebendal church of Saint Margaret in Leicester, founded in the cathedral church of the Blessed Virgin Mary in Lincoln."

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

At the upper end of the North aile is an alabaster altar monument of John Penny, LL.D. abbot of Leicester, Bishop of Bangor 1504, and of Carlisle 1509. He died, at the end of the year 1519, or the beginning of the year 1520, on a visit at Leicester abbey; where it is supposed that he was buried; and that, on the suppression of that monastery, his monument was removed to this church, to which he had been a special benefactor.

This tomb[3], the work of no inferior artist, still remains in good preservation; and is represented in Plate XXXIX. fig. 5.

Wyrley's Notes, in the College of Arms, preserve an epitaph, on a mural monument, to the memory of John Middleton, mayor of Leicester in 1578, who died in 1588.

Arms: Quarterly, 1. and 4. . . . . . fretty . . . . . and a canton; 2. and 3. . . . . . three hounds currant in pale Or; fig. 6.

In the chancel.

On mural monuments on the North side:

"In memory of Francis Nedham, gent.
who died September the 16th, 1786, aged 71 years;
and of Elizabeth his wife,
the daughter of Thomas Stanley, gent.
who died September the 19th, 1802, aged 79 years."

Arms: Party per fess, Argent and Ermine, a pale counterchanged; three pheons' heads Argent. Crest, upon a chapeau Gules, turned up Ermine, a pheon's head Or, between two wings Argent. Nutt; fig. 10.

"Near to this place lie interred the remains of William Nutt, esq.
late of Hornsey-lane in the county of Middlesex, and son of Josiah and Dorothy Nutt,
of this place.
He was a father to the fatherless—
the widow and orphan felt his bounty.
He was frugal in his own expences, that he might have the heartfelt satisfaction of relieving others.
None could more lament his death than his relations; which happened on the 16th of October, 1788,
in the 64th year of his age."

On the South side, on a neat marble tablet:

"Near to this place lie the remains of Mrs. Mary Nutt, wife of Mr. James Nutt
of this place,
who departed this life July 28, 1790,
aged 43 years.
She was a most affectionate wife,
a tender mother, and a sincere friend.
She stretched out her hand to the poor—yea, she reached out her hand to the needy."

On flat stones:

"Here lieth interred the body of Hellen Pares,
the wife of Thomas Pares, and daughter of Mr. Thomas Peak of Loddington, who departed this life October the 16th, 1706,
aged 25 years.
Here also lieth the body of John the son of Thomas and Hellen Pares, who departed this life October 10th, 1706.
Here lies also the body of Dorothy,
the second wife of Thomas Pares, and daughter of Mr. John Wilford of Gadsby, who departed this life the 23d day of October, 1717,
aged 24 years.
Also John, the son of Thomas Pares
by Dorothy his wife, died Oct. 30, 1715, aged 14 days."

"Here lieth interred the body of Mr. John Pares, one of the aldermen, and once mayor, of this Borough, who departed this life the 6th of September, 1712,
aged 77 years.
Here also lieth interred the body of Mary the wife of John Pares, gent. who departed this life February the 1st, 1728,
in the 92d year of her age."

"Here lies the body of Elizabeth the wife of Mr. Thomas Pares,

[1] There used formerly to be a solemn procession from the collegiate church of St. Mary de Castro to that of St. Margaret, every Whit-Monday, in which the image of the Virgin Mary was carried under a canopy borne by four persons, with a minstrel, harp, or other musick, and twelve persons representing the twelve Apostles, each of whom had the name of the Apostle whom he represented written on parchment fixed on his bonnet; and fourteen persons bearing banners, with the virgins in the parish attending. When they came to St. Margaret's, among other oblations there were two pairs of gloves, whereof one is said to be for God, the other for St. Thomas of India. A similar procession was, on the same day, made from St. Martin's church to St. Margaret's; viz. the image of St. Martin was carried thither, with twelve persons representing the Apostles, and twelve banners, &c.; but no musick, or any canopy carried over St. Martin. And the like procession, Mr. Carte thought, was made from all the other churches in the town; but the records of them are lost. These annual processions occasioned a very broad street leading from the North Gate to this Church to be called Sonvey, or Sancta via.

"Here lies the body of Deborah, late wife of Nathaniel Norris, daughter of Mr. John Potter, citizen of London, and grand-daughter of Dr. John Boylston, late rector of Bosworth.
Her piety and devotion, her charity and goodness,
her humanity and modesty,
her pleasing and innocent conversation,
as also her obliging demeanour to all sorts of people, made her a great ornament to her sex, and a good example to all such women as desire to excel in virtue.
She departed this life Sept. 15, 1711, aged 32.
In the same grave lies Rebecca the daughter of Nathaniel Norris by the said Dorothy his wife;
she died the 22d of September, 1711, aged 9 days.
Near this place lies the body of Deborah their eldest daughter, who died the 1st of April, 1711, aged 12 months.
As also of Rebecca Walker, late wife of Treen Walker, of Draycut in the county of Warwick, gent.
daughter of John Shuckbrough, of Burbury in the same county, esq.
by Anne his wife, and great-grandmother to the last-mentioned Deborah.
She died Sept. 1, 1711, aged 92."

"Hic jacet Anna, uxor Edvardi Wigley, M. D. quæ cum indole eximiâ, et fide erga Deum insigni, virtutum omnium feraci, innuptam exornâsset vitam: ne quid tam charæ superis animæ deesset, omnem conjugii vicem, pietate et studio in suos, paucis heu! annis [pro sorte humanâ] explevit, obiit 1 Maii, A. "Mariæ uxoris Antonii Major [1], generosi, quod in terris reliquum est, vicino requiescit pulvere, pientissimæ, viz. animæ non indignum domicilium; quod ut meliori potiretur, libentissimè resignavit, quarto die Septembris, anno Domini 1649, ætatis suæ 26.

"Maria Major."
Anagramma,
"Jam Ira Amor [2]."

Now Anger's chang'd to Love; now Death, which is The Wage of Sin, becomes the way to bliss.
See what the soveraigne vertue of Christ's blood
Can do, make Crosses Crownes, and Poyson food."

On a slate in the South-east aile:

"Hic jacet corpus Thomæ Major . . . . Major et Janæ uxor ejus, filia Gulielmi Farmer, ... juxta hoc monumentum . . . . . . [The rest obliterated.]

On a white stone, with the arms of Major (fig. 7.):

"Sub hoc saxo deposita sunt corpora Joannis Major, generosi, et Janæ uxoris ejus. Ille obiit 12 die Aprilis, anno Dom. 1661, ætatis suæ 60. Hæc 11 die Aprilis, anno Dom. 1676, ætatis suæ 78."

Round the margin:

"Here lieth interr'd the bodie of Willam Farmer, ..." [The rest obliterated.]

On another atchievement:

Major; impaling, Vert, a chevron, and in chief three escalops Or; fig. 9.

On a flat stone:

"Joh'es Major, Joh'is filius . . . ."

On a brass plate let into the stone:

". . . . . Siste, Viator.
. . . . Legas, ne lugeas, quæso. Hic Susanna Major, relicta Johan. Major, armigeri, ad pedes viri sui charissimi jacet, quem vivum et mortuum observandum novit; annos viduitatis egit tres; et tandem vitâ hac fragili prudenter piè et religiosè consummatâ in vitam sempiternam migravit, decimo nono die Martii, anno Dom. 1705, ætatis 28."

Under the above:

"Formâ magnus; nomine
major; maximus jure.
. . . è scalâ nitidis scandit
. . . . . och superis
. . . . . ite nitidis."

"Here lieth interred the body of John Newton senior, who departed this life the 15th of December, 1739,
in the 67th year of his age.

[2] Though anagrams are commonly elaborate trifles, yet there is a singular and edifying quaintness in the sententious import of the above, especially when collated with the English paraphrase that attends it. W. B.

Also Elizabeth his wife departed this life
Jan. 17, 1747, aged 85 years."

"Here lieth interred the body of John Newton junior,
who departed this life the 18th day of May, 1742,
in the 46th year of his age."

"Here lie interred the bodies of John and William Newton, sons of John Newton junior by Mary his wife.
William departed this life May the 18th, 1749,
in the 22d year of his age;
John died July the 30th, 1749, aged 30 years."

"In memory of James Bishop,
one of the aldermen of this Borough,
who served the office of mayor in the year 1782, and died Aug. 18, 1803, in the 79th year of his age.
Also of Hannah his wife, who died June 15, 1797,
in the 78th year of her age."

"To the memory of Mrs. Sarah Bishop, wife of Mr. William Bishop, who died the 23d day of September, 1787,
in the 32d year of her age."

"To the memory of John-Peter Allemand, who died Jan. 19, 1789, aged 45 years."

"In a vault near this place are deposited the remains of Mr. Samuel Miles, late of this Borough.
He departed this life the 9th day of June,
in the year of our Lord 1798,
and in the 54th year of his age.
In the same vault are deposited six of his children."

Arms: Argent, a chevron between three foxes' heads, erased Gules; fig. 11.

"Sacred to the memory of John Fox, surgeon.
His conduct in domestic life endeared him to his family; and his professional merit gained him the esteem of all with whom his practice connected him.
He departed this life July 5, 1787,
aged 59 years.
Also near this place are deposited the remains of Jane Fox, one of the daughters of the above John Fox. She departed this life Nov. 6, 1785, aged 26 years."

On flat stones:
William Stretton, Nov. 20, 1691, aged 65.
Richard Mansfield, Nov. 27, 1699, aged 29.
Robert, son of Robert Norton, Jan. 30, 1723.
William Borrows, Sept. 9, 1726, aged 59.
Mr. Robert Norton, Feb. 1, 1737, aged 47.
Jane, wife of John Berridge, Dec. 21, 1737, aged 37.
George Blaksley, June 29, 1739, aged 69.
Hannah, the wife of Samuel Hutchinson, June 18, 1741, aged 50.
Matthew Linwood, Feb. 28, 1783, aged 56.
Samuel Markland, March 12, 1805, aged 46.

Under the organ-loft:

"William, son of the Rev. William Sparrow, M.A. vicar of Diseworth, and Sarah his wife, born Dec. 12, 1777, died July 12, 1788."

"Anthony Ward, June 21, 1765, aged 65.
Also the body of Anne, wife of Henry Ward,
Sept. 21, 1779, aged 40.
She was a good Christian, a sincere companion, and met with calm intrepidity the stroke of Death.

To thee my gently drooping head I bend;
Thy sigh, my husband, and thy tear, my friend;
On thee I muse, and in thy hast'ning sun,
See life expiring ere 'tis well begun.
The Angels call—they call me from above,
And bid me hasten to the realms of love;
My soul with transport hears the happy doom;
I come, ye gentle Messengers, I come."

"Mary, daughter of Robert Bree, M.D. and Elizabeth his wife, died Nov. 26, 1792, aged 2 years."

On a monument against the South-west wall:

"Near this place are deposited the remains of Elizabeth the wife of John Miles,
one of the aldermen of this Borough,
and daughter of the late John Hickman, of Tinkwood Hall in Cheshire, gent.
She died Jan. 30, 1772, in the 57th year of her age.
She was an amiable pattern of conjugal virtues, and of maternal tenderness. How great then the loss of her surviving son and husband!"

At the West end of the church:

"D. O. M.
Here lie the remains of Mr. John Farmer, attorney at law, solicitor of this Corporation, whose integrity in his profession, humanity of temper, easiness of address, and extensive charity, gained the hearts of all who knew him alive, and drew tears from their eyes when dead; but from none more abundant and sincere, than his afflicted wife Isabella, daughter and coheir of Thomas Levinge, of Shepey, esq. who, at her own costs and charges, inclosed this ground[1], and erected this monument, a token of her conjugal love, and a resting-place for herself and family. He departed this life the 17th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1737, aged 54 years."

"Here also lie the remains of Isabella, wife of the said John Farmer, of Leicester, gent. and daughter of the late Thomas Levinge, of Shepey in the county of Leicester, esq.
She departed this life Nov. 16, anno Domini 1764.
Here also is interred Isabella Burrell, daughter of the above John and Isabel Farmer.
She departed this life June 28, 1755, aged 27.

Mortal, gaze on! Still as you gaze,
Let this be your instruction;
That, like a plant, God did you raise;
Earth was your chief production.
One blooming plant lies wither'd here,
Admir'd by all who'd seen her:
Death cropt its stem, by God's command,
To grace our dear Redeemer."

"To the memory of William Farmer, son of John Farmer by Isabella his wife.
He died Nov. 17, 1758, aged 26 years.
Here rests benevolence in manly youth,
Complacent manners, and ingenuous truth;
With filial piety and social join'd
Unshaken constancy, to fate resign'd:
If to his share some human errors fell,
Ask your own breast where does perfection dwell?"

"Here lyeth the body of Mary Miles, wife of alderman Miles,
and daughter of John Pares, gent.
She departed this life July 24, 1759, aged 67."

In the church, under the tower:

"Here lieth interred the body of Jane,
the daughter of Anthony Ward by Alice his wife,
who departed this life the 7th day of May, 1757,
in the 13th year of her age.
Hark, from the tombs a doleful sound;
My ear, attend the cry:
You living men, come view the ground
Where you must shortly lie.
Princess, this clay must be your bed,
In spite of all your towers:
The tall, the wise, the reverend head,
Must lie as low as ours."

At the West end, against the tower:

"Sacred to the memory of John Mansfield, esq.
who died Sept. 24, 1798, aged 59.

If feelings just, which unconstrain'd expand
With genuine ardour warm from Nature's hand;
A heart that glow'd each selfish thought above,
With social kindness, and parental love;
A public spirit, lib'ral, unconfin'd,
The World his circle, and his friends Mankind:
If such may justly claim the hallow'd tear,
Let faithful Memory drop the tribute here."

"In memory of Elizabeth Cotchett, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Cotchett;
she died Nov. 25, 1793, aged 5 years and 4 months."

On atchievements:

1. Or, a chevron Ermine, between three olive-leaves Vert, Hesilrige; impaling, Sable, on a chevron between three lamps Argent, fire Or, three mullets Sable; Farmer; Plate XXXIX. fig. 12.

2. Quarterly: 1. and 4. Farmer; 2. and 3. Vert, a chevron Or; in chief three escalop-shells; Levinge. Crest, a cubit arm couped proper, holding a lamp as before. Plate XLI. fig. 13.

3. Farmer; impaling Levinge. Pl. XXXIX. fig. 13.

In the church-yard.

A splendid monument, adorned on the North and South sides with military trophies, beautifully carved in slate, and containing at the West end the following inscription, is hastening rapidly to decay:

Arms: Argent, a chevron between three boars' heads erased Azure. Crest, on a wreath, a stag's head couped proper. Supporters, two stags of the last. Motto, La Fortune passe par tout. Pl. XLI. fig. 14.

"Here are deposited, by his express desire, the remains of the Right Honourable ANDREW LORD ROLLO, a Scots peer, who betaking himself, though late, to a military life, soon became distinguished by the exertion of every talent which constitutes the spirited commander, the humane officer, and compleat gentleman.
As lieutenant-colonel-commandant, he embarked with the 22d regiment in the year 1756 for North America, from whence, after a series of the severest and most dangerous services, in the year 1761, as brigadier-general, he was detached by General Amherst, to reduce the island of Dominique, with 700 men, which he happily effected.
He soon after shared in the siege of Martinique, where he lost his only son, a youth of the most promising hopes, who had served the Generals Amherst and Monkton as brigade-major. He afterwards landed at the Havannah, where he served at the head of a brigade, till within ten days of the reduction of Port Moro, when the pressure of present duty, the fatigues of past services, a broken constitution, and the importunity of his General and Physicians, obliged him to retire. He died at Leicester[1] the 2d of June, 1765, in the 61st year of his age, on his way to Bristol, where he had been advised to go for the recovery of his health."

On altar-tombs:

"Here lieth the body of James Annis,
one of the aldermen of this Borough,
and once mayor.
He died the 18th day of October, 1719, aged 69.
Here lieth the body of Martha, the wife of James Annis, one of the aldermen of this Borough, and once mayor.
She died Nov. 5, 1719, aged 46.
Here lieth the body of James Annis, gent. their son, who departed this life Aug. 2, 1733, aged 28."

"In certain hopes of a happy resurrection, here are deposited the remains of Catherine, daughter of John and Mary Palmer, who, after supporting a long and painful decline with patience, resignation, and Christian fortitude, departed this life April 20, 1778, aged 26.
Early thy life of pilgrimage is run,
Thy business on this earthly stage is done.
Stern Death, who levels all that's form'd of clay,
Of thy fair blossoms made an easy prey:
Easy indeed; for like a lamb you went,
And full as innocent your life was spent.
Content and thankfulness, those gifts divine,
With meekness, mildness, patience, all were thine;
Strict filial duties were thy constant guide,
For in such virtues was thy only pride.
Death, whose grim aspect frightens each degree,
Had yet no terrors that could frighten thee:
E'en Death itself left on thy face a smile,
Expressive of, 'Farewell, my friends, awhile!'
What shall we say, if Heaven's to thee not kind?
What must become of us who stay behind?
All doubts forbear; thou'rt now at peace and rest,
And with thy kindred Saints supremely blest.
Reader, whoe'er thou art, to die prepare;
To live hereafter be thy constant care."

On upright stones:

"Here lieth the body of John Roberts, gent. twice mayor of this Borough.
He died April 17, 1705, aged 75;
and Elizabeth his wife died Nov. 14, 1696, aged 71."

"William Heaford departed this life June 9, 1723,
in the 19th year of his age.
In swimming I my pleasure oft have sought:
By sinking, I to sudden death was brought.
Oh! that they were wise, that they would consider their latter end!"

"Here lieth interred the body of William Spencer, who departed this life the 2d of March,
in the year of our Lord 1763,
in the 47th year of his age.
Farewell, my friends of every kind:
Imprint this lesson on your mind;
In time you all must sleep in dust,
Until the rising of the just.
Dear wife, prepare 'gainst that great day!"

"In memory of John Bass, esq. who departed this life Nov. 8, 1764, aged 69."

"In memory of Alice Newbery.
She died Feb. 13, 1777, aged 61 years."

"In sure and certain hope of a happy resurrection, lie the remains of Martha,
wife of John Dalby of this parish.
She departed this life on the 29th of August, 1781,
aged 41 years.
Being early instructed in the true principles of Religion,
she did not depend on her own perfections,
but on the merits and redemption of a blessed Saviour, for a joyful and happy resurrection.
Also two of their children, Mary and Samuel, who both died in their infancy."

On an elegant marble monument:

"John, Ann, and Mary-Ann, children of John and Mary Mansfield, died in their infancy.
Sacred to the memory of Mary Mansfield, wife of John Mansfield, gent.
She died Oct. 31, 1787, aged 43 years."

"Near this stone are deposited the remains of John Brooke, esq. of Withybrooke, in the county of Warwick;
who, during the period of life allotted to him
by Providence,
acquired much various and useful knowledge;
united great elegance of manners with a correct and discriminating taste;
and was deservedly esteemed by those who knew him.
He maintained a long, but ineffectual struggle with the infirmities of a feeble constitution; and at length died in this Borough, May 14, 1795,
in the 36th year of his age.
This stone is placed to perpetuate his memory by one of his surviving friends."

[1] At the Three Crowns Inn, then kept by Mr. James Bishop.

A grave-stone of curious workmanship[1], by Mr. William Firmadge of Leicester, is thus inscribed:

"In memory of Elizabeth, wife of John Ireland, who died March 26, 1804, aged 83 years.
In hopes of a joyful resurrection, here rest the remains of John Ireland, who departed this life Sept. 7, 1776, aged 60."

"Here lieth the body of Mr. Robert Newton, attorney at law;
who married the 4th daughter of George Ashley, esq.
deceased, and had by her 4 sons and 9 daughters.
He died Feb. 1, 1737, aged 47."

"Here lie the remains of Mary Tansley, who, after living 40 years in the service of William Cooke, of this parish, gent. departed this life
the 2d of May, 1784, in the 61st year of her age.
The memory of the just is blessed."

"In memory of Samuel Oliver, esq.
one of the aldermen, and twice mayor, of this Borough.
He died June 19, 1787, aged 72 years.
Margaret Oliver died Aug. 15, 1764, aged 48.
Thomas-Bass Oliver, gent. son of the late Samuel Oliver and Margaret, died June 13, 1790, aged 40."

In Plate XLI. are given three Official Seals.

The Seal of the Prebendary of St. Margaret's; containing the Arms of the See of Lincoln; impaling, Quarterly, Or and Sable, a cross moline quarterly countercharged. Taylor; fig. 7.

The Seal of Edward Taylor, LL. B. Official of the Archdeaconry of Leicester 1771; fig. 8.

The Seal of the same Gentleman as Commissary of the Archdeaconry 1771; fig. 9.

Both these contain the Arms of the See of Lincoln; impaling, Gules, a chevron Or, between three crescents Ermine; Geary.

Fig. 10. represents an old Key, found in digging a grave in St. Margaret's church-yard in November 1793.

The BISHOP'S FEE.

The antient Lords of Leicester were the Earls of Mercia and the Bishops[2].

Remigius de Fescamp Bishop of Lincoln, at the time of the general survey, in 1066, held ten ploughlands in Leicester. He had five ploughs in demesne; and a mill and a half of ten shillings and eight pence value; and two churches, of the value of fifteen shillings; and seventeen burgesses, who paid thirty-two pence yearly. From one part of the land in the Suburbs (extra murum) he had five shillings and four pence; and three villans, with a priest and twelve bordars, had four ploughs. He had also twenty acres of meadow[3].

In an Inquisition taken in 1279, this district is thus noticed:

"Leicestrie Suburbium, extra Portam Orientalem in hundredo de Gartre. Episcopus Lincolnie tenet in dictó suburbio duas carucatas terre de domino rege in eleemosynâ, et habet regale, & mensuram panis et cervisie, et mensuram villenagii.

Willielmus Touke octavas virgatas terre, de quibus sex tenentur de heredibus Wintonie et heredes de rege in capite; et alie due virgate terre de Abbate Leicestrie, et ipse de comite Leicestrie, et comes de rege. Et non dat scutagium.

Et Thomas Coste in quinque virgatas terre de predicto Episcopo, et episcopus de rege in eleemosynâ.

Et sunt in dicto Suburbio viginti messuagia; tenentur de Episcopo Lincolnie, et episcopus de rege in eleemosynam[4]."

In the subsidies of 1416 and 1445, the district called The Suburbs of Leicester, in the Hundred of Gartre, was assessed at 1*l*. 16*s*.

"The manor which the Bishops had lay in the Suburbs on the East side of the town in the parish of St. Margaret, and in Knighton, containing of old 32 houses and two churches. It is still called The Bishop's Fee, and remains out of the jurisdiction of the town, though attempts were made in the reigns of Edward VI. and Queen Elizabeth to have it united to, and reduced under, the government of it; but without effect[5]. The Bishops made the parsonage of St. Margaret a prebend of Lincoln; and the manor remained in them in 1138, as appears by a bull of Pope Innocent III.[6] dated 4 cal. of May in that year, confirming it to Alexander the then Bishop and his successors. But it was very soon after this tranferred to the Earl of Leicester, in exchange for the manor of Westcotes, and other lands in Estfordeby and Segrave, under the title of the manor of Cuihinton, or Knighton (as appears by Mon. Angl. vol. II. p. 315); and by Robert Bossu, founder of the abbey, was given to the monks there; and does now belong to the Duke of Devonshire. The rest of the Town and Suburbs belonged to the Earl of Mercia before the Conquest[7]."

A case was argued in the Court of King's Bench, May 19, 1789, Blankley against Winstanley and Burnaby, on an action of trespass and false imprisonment against the defendants, who were justices of the peace for the County of Leicester, "for causing the plaintiff to be apprehended and sent to the house of correction by virtue of a warrant issued by them, they not having any jurisdiction over The Bishop's Fee in the said county, inasmuch as it is within and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the magistrates of the Borough of Leicester, and not under the jurisdiction of the justices of the County. Plea, Not guilty." A special verdict had been found on this case at the preceding assizes for the County of Leicester; which stated the Borough of Leicester to be an antient Borough and body corporate, &c.; and, after citing several of the charters, stated the trespass to have been committed within the parish of St. Margaret, commonly called The Bishop's Fee, &c. The point on which the question turned was, "Whether the charter of Elizabeth, referring to former charters, has granted an exclusive jurisdiction to the Borough Magistrates over The Bishop's Fee, or only a concurrent jurisdiction with the County Justices?" By the determination of the Court for the defendants, the jurisdiction of course becomes concurrent[8].

In N° 22. of Decrees, &c. of Queen Elizabeth, Trin. 26 Eliz. fol. 53. b. the Queen's manor of Leicester is called The Bishop's Fee.

"Henricus Harington, miles, tenet manerium de Bishop's Fee, alias manerium Leicestrie, de rege, ut de honore de Hampton-court[9]."

In 1613 sir Richard Morison was cited, to shew by what title he held the manor called The Bishop's Fee[10].

There are several places in or about the town which are out of the franchises or liberties of it; viz. the Castle and Newark toward the South-west, the Bishop's Fee on the East, Abbey-gate and Wood-gate beyond the North bridges, and Braunston-gate, alias Bruntingsthorp, on the West side of the town.

[1] The prominent figure on this stone is Death presenting a globe to a sick man in bed.

[2] By the Bishops, is meant the Bishop of Lincoln for the time being. At the time of the Domesday Survey, Remigius de Fescamp, the then Bishop, held ten carucates of land in Leicester, with two churches, and other large possessions; among which, he had land "extra murum, tres bordarii, cum presbytero, et 12 bordarii." The Archbishop of York had two houses at that time in Leicester (with several carucates of land in Gartre Hundred), the abbey of Coventry ten, the abbey of Croyland three; Hugo de Grentesmainell had two churches, and nearly 200 houses; and many individuals and townships were owners of houses here.

[3] "Episcopus Lincolniensis tenet in Ledecestre 10 carucatas terræ. In dominico habet ibi 5 carucas; et molinum et dimidium de 10 solidis et 8 denariis; et 2 ecclesias de 15 solidis; et 17 burgenses, 32 denarios per annum reddentes. De unâ parte terræ extra murum habet 5 solidos et 4 denarios; et 3 villani, cum presbytero et 12 bordarii, habent 6 carucas. Ibi 30 acræ prati." Domesday, fol. 230. b. 2.

[4] Inq. 7 Edw. I.

[5] This, I am told, is ill-founded. The Bishop's Fee was always in some measure subject to the Borough magistrates.

SAINT MARTIN'S.

The statistical particulars in this page are extracted from the late Sir Frederick Morton Eden's valuable Publication "On the State of the Poor."

"St. Michael's consists entirely of buildings. In 1792, it contained 565 inhabited houses, and about 2825 souls. 520 houses pay the window-tax: very few are exempted, as the parish is situated in the centre of the town, and principally consists of good houses. The land-tax is about 10*d.* in the pound.

A considerable manufacture of worsted stockings is carried on here. Stocking-weavers earn from 7*s.* to 1*l.* 1*s.* a-week; wool-combers, from 9*s.* to 12*s.* a-week; worsted-spinners, from 4*d.* to 8*d.* a-day; agricultural labourers at present (1795) receive 1*s.* 6*d.* a-day, with victuals.

The prices of provisions in 1795 were, beef, 4½*d.* the pound; mutton, 5*d.*; veal, 4½*d.*; butter, 10½*d.* or 1*s.* the pound; bread, 1lb. 11oz. for 6*d.*; milk, 1½*d.* the quart, short measure.

In the town of Leicester there are now (1792) 143 public-houses; of which, 40 are inns; and 14 Friendly Societies, of which 3 are in this parish: almost all have had their rules confirmed by the magistrates. These institutions are much liked here, and are increasing in number very rapidly.

The poor of this parish are farmed by a man who receives from the parish 14*l.* a-week, or 728*l.* a-year. There are 42 persons (principally old women and children) at present under his care: some out-poor receive 4*l.* 11*s.* a-week. The farmer is a stocking-manufacturer, and employs the poor in spinning worsted, &c.: they work, in the summer, from 6 o'clock in the morning till 8 at night; and, in winter, from 7 in the morning till 9 at night; the time of meals excepted. The house is not well situated, nor aired in the best manner, but appears to be kept very clean: the beds are of flocks, and much infested with bugs. A woman teaches the children to read and spin. In cases of bastardy, the farmer does not take care of such as were not chargeable, or not born before his agreement with the parish. His agreement is renewed annually.

Table of Diet in the Poor-house.

	Breakfast.	Dinner.	Supper.
Sunday—	Milk-pottage, or gruel.	Broth, meat, and vegetables.	Bread, cheese, and Beer.
Monday—	Broth and bread.	Cold meat, vegetables, and beer.	Ditto.
Tuesday—	As Sunday.	As Sunday.	Ditto.
Wednesday—	As Monday.	As Monday.	Ditto.
Thursday—	As Sunday.	As Sunday.	Ditto.
Friday—	As Monday.	As Monday.	Ditto.
Saturday—	Milk-pottage.	Bread, cheese, and beer.	Ditto.

About 16*l.* a-year, from different donations, are annually distributed among the poor of this parish. There are in Leicester five Hospitals, in which there are usually about 200 poor.

The war has had no other effect upon the manufacturers of this town than by taking off a great number of hands: several soldiers' families of course became burdensome.

The manufactures of Leicester are sent to different parts of the kingdom, and to America.

Money for repairing bridges, &c. called Borough rates, is paid out of the poor's rates: it was generally about 70*l.* per annum; but now amounts to 200*l.* and upwards, in consequence of the floods last winter having carried away several bridges."

---

[1] Every parish in the town supports its own poor separately. The rates in the other parishes, it is said, are on an average nearly similar to those in this parish; some are a little higher, and some a little lower.—The following is an account, given by a woolcomber, of his earnings and expences. He is 50 years old; has a wife and two sons, the eldest 13, the youngest 9 years of age:

	£.	s.	d.
The man earns on an average 9*s.* a-week; annually	23	8	0
The oldest boy serves a bricklayer; he earns about 4*s.* 6*d.* a-week in winter, and 2*s.* a-week in summer, upon an average 3*s.* 6*d.* a-week; annually	8	9	0
The woman earns, by spinning and seaming stockings, 1*s.* 6*d.* a-week; annually — — —	3	18	0
Total earnings of the family — —	35	15	0
In bread, 3*s.* a-week before the present scarcity; at present 7*s.* a-week: the former sum amounts annually to — — — — —	7	16	0

		£.	s.	d.
10 lb. of butcher's meat weekly, at 3*d.* the lb.	Annually.	6	10	0
Potatoes and vegetables, 1*s.* 6*d.* weekly		3	18	0
Milk, 2*d.* a-day — — —		3	1	4
Ale and beer, about 1*s.* 6*d.* weekly —		3	18	0
Butter, 2lb. weekly, at 9*d.* the lb. —		3	18	0
Cheese, 3½lb. weekly, at 6*d.* the lb. —		4	11	0
Tea, sugar, &c. weekly about 1*s.* 6*d.* —		3	18	0
Clothes and fuel, estimated at — — —		6	0	0
House-rent — — — —		3	18	0
Total annual expences —		47	8	4
Deduct earnings — —		35	15	0
Deficiency —		11	13	4

This account, it is probable, is erroneous in some particulars; for the man has not lately received any assistance from the parish. He stated his various expences with every appearance of veracity. That he does not earn more than 9*s.* a-week, in a place where wages are high, is easily accounted for; he often spends two or three days in the week in an ale-house, lamenting the hardness of the times. Some inferences may be drawn from this account respecting the proportion of the different kinds of food used by people of this description in manufacturing towns. The improvidence of the family is glaring: not a sixpence is laid by to provide against sickness or old age; and it is probable, that the temporary incapacity arising from the one, or the inevitable effects of the other, will ultimately throw them on the parish.—F. M. E. August, 1795.

[2] It appears, from an old parish book, that in the year 1677 a rate of 1½*d.* in the pound was raised for the maintenance of the poor. Houses in this parish are usually assessed at about two-thirds of the net rent.

[1] The Saxon Chronicle, speaking of Alfred, in the year 883, p. 86: "And eac on Indea to S'te Thome and to S'te Bartholomee." "He also sent offerings into India to St. Thomas and St. Bartholomew." And William of Malmesbury, p. 24, lib. II. "Eleemosynis intentus [Alfredus] privilegia ecclesiarum, sicut pater statuerat, roboravit: & trans mare Thomam, & ad Sanctum Thomam in Indiam, multa munera misit." The conversion of India by St. Thomas may be found in any ecclesiastical history. The Christians of St. Thomas are noted in modern travels into India. See those of Paulus Venetus (13th century), p. 406, edit. Basil. 1537, folio, where lib. III. cap. 27, is intituled, "De civitate in quâ corpus Divi Thomæ sepultum est." This city is in Malabar.

Paid for this church book, bought at London the 14th day of February, anno Dom. 1544, 4*s.* 8*d.*[1]

Palm Sunday, the account was delivered to the succeeding churchwarden, Richard Raynford, who had a transfer of 9*s.* 6*d.* More owing to the church the same day, for the bells, as appeareth on the side of this leaf 37*s.* 4*d.* More owing to the church by Henry Maybley, for a Sepulchre light 10*s.*

1545.

In the year 1545, the church, and particularly the nave, was repaired: six load of freestone from the Freers, at 18*s.* per load. Then paid chief workmen 7*d.* per day; ordinary labourers 4*d.* per diem.

Annual obits in the church of St. Martin:

Of the gylde:	Mr. Parsons	5 bells.
	Mr. Lyle	4
	Mr. Hurste	4
	Mr. Davers	3
	Mr. Baylie's	4
	Mr. Whytwell's	3
	Mr. Swyk's	3
Other obits:	Mr. Wymeswold	4
	West	5
	John Wygston	5
	Thomas Drake	4
	Richard Fenes	4
	Cloughe	5

N. B. The last mention of these obits is in the 2 Edw. VI.; and I do not find that they were renewed in queen Mary's time.

Charge to the poor:

Nothing in 1544—1546; 1547, 3*l.* 2*s.* ob. when several tabernacles, &c. were sold in 1 Edw. VI.; and then nothing till 1551, 5 Edw. VI.; given to the poor at Christmas 20*s.*; and to the prisoners 2*s.* 8*d.*; 1552, 6 Edw. VI. to the poor 3*s.* 4*d.*; 1553, nothing.

It appears that there is not a constant account in this book of the charge of the poor.

The first time of the vicars of St. Martin's being present at the churchwardens accounts (which I find) is 1546; 3 Edw. VI. 1549; and then he is mentioned after several others, some few following, and so 1550 and 1553.

Those who are named before the vicar are said to be masters of the said parish 1551, 1552.

The account of Richard Boynsforde and Henry Mabley, churchwardens of St. Martin's in Leicester, made on Palm Sunday, the 18th of April, in the year of our Lord God 1546, before Mr. Cotton, then mayor of the town of Leicester, Mr. Gyllot, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Wood, Mr. May, Mr. Vicars, and others, in our Lady's choir within the same church.

It appears also, that for any great jobs done in the church, the mayor and corporation contributed largely.

The re-casting the leads of the church came, in this year, to 6*l*. 12*s*. 7*d*. towards which half was raised by the aldermen and common council.

1596.

The churchwarden Richard "Folliare" is written Richard "Folzer, churchmaster."

A levy was made this year for the communion plate, viz. of twelve of the mayor's brethren, and two gentlemen, 50*s*.; of 19 of the 48, 31*s*. 8*d*.; of the commoners 19*s*. 6*d*.

1597.

Here begins, and continues in the following years, an account of the particular receipts and payments at the Communions; and it was received 17 times this year. The receipts were between 1*s*. 2*d*. and 6*s*.

The charge of bread and wine between 1*s*. 10*d*. and 7*s*.

An order came from the Bishop of Lincoln for new-pewing the church, and building the North gallery uniform with the South gallery built in 1705.

In April this year, the inhabitants of St. Martin's determined to convert their parish houses into a workhouse, by joining two of the lower apartments into one, for a working-room, and fitting up two others for a kitchen, cellar, &c. and furnishing them[2].

In the year 1730, Mr. Needham, who lived in the church-yard, obtained leave from the parish to make the gravel-walk, and plant it with trees at his own expence.

In 1737, it was agreed, that part of the spire should be taken down, i. e. two feet below the first window, at the expence of 126*l.*; an enormous expence, if compared with the rebuilding St. Mary's spire lately. Moreover, the builder, whose name was Jackson, tricked the parish out of a full yard of its height[3].

[1] Samuel Carte, esq. afterwards an eminent solicitor in Chancery, and an able Ecclesiastical Antiquary.

[2] In about six months after this alteration, the state of this workhouse was thus described: "They first made choice of a master, who has the immediate care of the poor, to keep them in order, and employ them in such work as they are capable of, and see that their food is duly prepared, and given to them, &c. He has two apartments assigned to him, his diet and washing, and 12*l.* a year salary. The parish overseers buy all things necessary for the house, and the poor in it. For their cloathing, they buy whole pieces of woollen and linen; which, when cut out, is made up into cloaths, by such of the poor as are capable of it. The overseers, about once a month, send in five strike of malt, which the master brews at once into good drink; and every Saturday the overseers buy a sufficient quantity of wholesome meat, and send it to the master. If any of the poor fall sick, a proper provision is made for them, and some of their fellow-poor is appointed to attend them. They are all confined within the precincts of the house, and are not to go out of it without leave of the master; if any of them have employment abroad, they are obliged to return in a due hour; and whoever employs them, agrees with the master for the wages, and pays them to him; which, together with the product of the labours of the rest, he delivers to the overseers every Friday in the evening, who take the accounts from the master; and adds, out of the parish-stock, what is wanting for making provision for the following week. The general method for employing them, besides what is above-mentioned, is in spinning jersey: such as cannot spin are set to knit stockings for the rest; and one is appointed to teach children to read. The time of working is twelve hours in the day, winter and summer. The number of the poor is 28, viz. 16 old, and 12 under 8 years of age. The product of their labours, one week with another, is about 14*s.* the charge of maintaining them weekly is 2*l.* that is, about 1*l.* 6*s.* above their labour. The charge of maintaining the poor used to be about 250 or 300*l.* a year. The charge this year, in cloathing the poor, upon placing them in the workhouse, and buying utensils, &c. is much greater than can be in future years; and yet the overseer assures me, that he is sure the parish will even this year save 100*l.* The children have a form placed for them in the alley, before the seat of the parish officers, to sit upon on Sundays; but there is no particular place as yet assigned to the elder poor at church." History of Workhouses, Oct. 10, 1724.

After 1592 comes "1599, 8; 1600, 8; 1601, 12; 1602, 6."

"King James I.; marriages.—1604, 17; 1605, 19; 1606, 14; 1607, 9; 1608, 10; 1609, 10; 1610, 8; 1611, 11; 1612, 22; 1613, 16; 1614, 19; 1615, 19; 1616, 16; 1617, 18; 1618, 18; 1619, 13; 1620, 9; 1621, 7; 1622, 11; 1623, 10; 1624, 6."

"In Queen Elizabeth's reign; burials.—1559, 57; 1560, 37; 1561, 39; 1562, 23; 1563, 24; 1564, 41; this year, May 11, the daughter of William Righlye, buried of the pest; same day, Bagalie's sonne, of the pest. 25th, Awfray, daughter of Richard Bagalie, of the pest. June, 3d day of the same year, Richard Baglye, of the pest. 9th, William, sonne of Richard Jackson, of the pest;" these are all the pest burials at St. Martin's through this year mentioned. From the first of her reign to the end of 1562, there is a register of the number of bells used at the funerals, not less than three, and five seems to be the whole power of the steeple; I suppose the fees, either to sexton or master, rose with the number of bells. Most are without bells, though a single bell, as now, might announce the funeral.

"1565, 36." After April 13, 1566, the register says, "the rest is wanting from the 13th day of April, reginæ 8, anno Dom. 1566, as may appeare in the old book."

"1567, 29; 1568, 46; 1570, 37; 1571, 27; 1572, 30; 1573, 19." Five bells used five times in 1587, and five bells once in 1588, Feb. 2, no other number.

"King James's reign.—1604, 30; 1605, 52; 1606, 26; 1607, 44; 1608, 31; 1609, 42; 1610, 82; a cross on the left margin, "the sickness began, plague, 21st of August;" "1611, 128; 1612, 39; 1613, 25; 1614, 34; 1615, 60; 1616, 41; 1617, 39; 1618, 37; 1619, 28; 1620, 25; 1621, 43; 1622, 27; 1623, 37; 1624, 24."

"In the reign of King Charles I.; burials.—1635, 45; 1636; 1637, 23; 1638, 54; 1639, 77; 1640, 43; 1641, 45; 1642, 54; 1643, 48;" here ends vivat vivat. The register ends, and a blank ensues after April 27, 1644, till April 27, 1649, and then no vivat vivat.

"1650, 44; 1651, 52; 1652, 40." The register ends, ne plus ultra, 1653, with October 1, "Thomas Ward, clerke, was buried."

"Richard Elkinton, of Shawell[1], yeoman, May 29, 1607, bequeathed to the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of Leicester 50*l.* to lend to five poor artificers or tradesmen of Leicester, such as the vicar and churchwardens of this parish nominate, on St. Andrew's day, yearly; to be paid them on St. Thomas's day; upon proper security for re-payment, with use, after the rate of 5*l. per cent.*; and of the use, 40*s.* to be distributed by the vicar and churchwardens of this parish, between the 21st and 25th of December, among the poor of this parish, and the other 10*s.* to be to the town clerk, for entering the orders, and making the bonds."

In St. Martin's parish, between Midsummer and St. Thomas's day 1793 only 18 persons died, of whom three were widows, whose ages (added together) make 266 years. The average deaths in the parish, at that period, were supposed to be about 80.

A lectureship was founded in this parish in the seventeenth century; and a parish workhouse established early in the eighteenth century[2].

In a deed 6 Edw. VI. there is mentioned Parchment-lane[3], in the parish of St. Martin's. The Horse and Trumpet was then called the Angel; and was sold for 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* by John Cressey, glover, to John Stanford, butcher, 4 and 5 Philip and Mary.

"Clement Charde, mercer, & Dorothea uxor ejus. Noveritis quod nos pro vi*l.* x*s.* tradidisse Thomæ Cotton, generoso, gardinam, continentem dimidiam acram, jacentem inter terram Henrici Harrington, militis, quondam Henrici comitis Huntingdon, ex parte Orientali & terram predicti Thomæ Cotton, quondam Georgii Turpin, militis, ex parte Occidentali, & extendit se a venellâ vocatâ Dead Lane, in parte Australi, usque terram prædicti Thomæ Cotton, quondam Georgii Turpyn, militis, versus Borealem. Dat. 38 Eliz. 6 Feb."

A tenement, called Talbot's House, and three acres of land in Leicester, were let to Edmund Froste, by queen Elizabeth, 1584[4].

A tenement lying in Leicester town, with a croft there, called The Isle of the Fenn, were let to Robert Newcome, by lease from the Crown, 1587[5].

The CHURCH (Plate XLIII).

The latitude of St. Martin's church (which stands nearly in the centre of the town) is 52° 38′; and the difference between the meridian of this and the Observatory at Greenwich is 4′ 35″ to the West.

The church is very ancient; one of the largest, and esteemed the principal church in the county.

The materials, particularly on the North side, appear to have been taken from an old ruin, probably from a portion of the Town-wall, which, at the Conquest, lay in massy heaps.

At what period it was re-built after the destruction[6] of Leicester in the reign of king Henry the Second, cannot be accurately stated; but it then consisted only of a handsome spire[7], spacious chancel, and two ailes. A considerable addition (of a third aile) was some time after[8] made to it all along the South side; when the outer wall being taken down, on nearly the same ground whereon it stood was erected that remarkable light range of clustered columns which now support the roof, partly hidden by a gallery. On each side of this aile are some curious roof-supporters.

"The chancel is 18 yards and a half long, and is 7 yards and 20 iches wide, within the walls. This," says Mr. Carte, "I observe, because I find the following memorandum in Charyte's Rentale: "Cancella Sancti Martini ædificata fuit A. D. 1409, tempore Ricardi Rotheley abbatis, & constabat xxxiv*l.*"

[1] See vol. IV. p. 258.

[2] The following account of it is from a letter dated Oct. 10, 1724: "In April last, St. Martin's parish determined to convert their parish houses into a workhouse, by joining the lower apartments into one, for a working-room, and fitting up two others for a kitchen, a cellar, &c. and furnishing them. They first made choice of a master, who has the immediate care of the poor, to keep them in order, and employ them in such work as they are capable of, and see that their food is duly prepared and given to them, &c. He has two apartments assigned to him, his diet and washing, and 12*l.* a year salary. The parish overseers buy all things necessary for the house, and the poor in it. For their cloathing, they buy whole pieces of woollen and linen; which, when cut out, is made up into cloaths, by such of the poor as are capable of it. The overseers, about once a month, send in five strike of malt, which the master brews at once into good drink; and every Saturday the overseers buy for them a sufficient quantity of wholesome meat, and send it to the master. If any of the poor fall sick, a proper provision is made for them, and some of their fellow-poor are appointed to attend them. They are all confined within the precincts of the house, and are not to go out of it without leave of the master; if any of them have employment abroad, they are obliged to return in a due hour; and whoever employs them, agrees with the master for their wages, and pays them to him; which, together with the product of the labour of the rest, he delivers to the overseers every Friday in the evening, who then take the accounts from the master; and add out of the parish stock, what is wanting for making provision for the following week. The general method for employing them, besides what is above mentioned, is in spinning jersey: such as cannot spin are set to knit stockings for the rest, and one is appointed to teach the children to read. The time of working is twelve hours in the day, winter and summer. The number of the poor is 28, viz. 16 old, and 12 under 8 years of age. The product of their labours, one week with another, is about 14*s.* the charge of maintaining them weekly is about 2*l.* that is, about 1*l.* 6*s.* above their labour. The charge of maintaining the poor used to be about 250 or 300*l.* a year. The charge this year, in cloathing the poor, upon placing them in the workhouse, and buying utensils, &c. is much greater than can be in future years; and yet the overseer assures me, that he is confident the parish will even this year save 100*l.* The children have a form placed in the alley, before the seat of the parish officers, to sit upon on Sundays; but there is no particular place as yet assigned to the elder poor at church." This workhouse is still kept up, though not precisely in the manner here described; and in 1776 contained 90 persons.

[6] Before that event, Mr. Throsby supposes "that the church, and even some of the streets, stood in a different position."

[7] "As the addition of spires to sacred edifices was not introduced into England from the East till the beginning of the reign of Henry the Third, the date must be fixed between the two intervening centuries; and, if the spire was built with the church, not very early after the introduction of that ornament of our churches, as the handsome, solid form of St. Martin's bespeaks considerable practice and expertness in the art." Walk through Leicester, p. 133.

[8] "Somewhat like this was formerly done in Greece and Asia Minor, to the old Greek parallelogram temples. The external colonade was walled up, and pillars substituted to the original side walls; and so became a church, or nave, a body, with two ailes or wings." G. A.

BRITISH 12 JN 1923 MUSEUM

In the chancel (which is the property of the king, and is rented by the vicar) are three stalls, with flat arches, all of equal height, and filled up.

The Fox preaching to the Geese, in the great window of the North cross aile in this church, as standing there June 29, 1730, is engraved, from a drawing by Mr. Peck, in Plate XLIII. fig. 1. Under it is written, "Testis est mihi Deus, quam cupiam vos omnes visceribus meis."

Mr. Burton, in 1622, describes these arms in the church, Plate XLIII. fig. 2—8:

In the North-east window:

Gules, a cinquefoil Ermine. The coat of the old Earls of Leicester, and of the Abbey.

Quarterly, Argent and Gules. Soulney.

Argent, gutté de sang in saltire Gules.

Azure, a plain cross Argent. Aylesbury.

In the North-west window:

Gules, three lions passant guardant Or. England.

The same, debruised in the bend Azure. Henry earl of Lancaster and Derby.

The same, with a label of three points of France. Earl of Lancaster.

In the Matriculus of 1220, St. Martin's is noticed among the churches under the patronage of the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis, who held it to their own use ab antiquo [1].

In Pope Nicholas's taxation, about 1290, this church was thus valued:

"Ecclesia Sancti Martini xi marc'.

"Vicaria ejusdem vii marc'.

"Æstimatio obventionum Sanctæ Crucis in eâdem ecclesiâ x marc'."

In 1344, this church paid 7*s*. 6½*d*. for procurations; was valued at 11 marks; and paid 1*s*. 4*d*. for Peter-pence.

Charyte, in his Rentale [2], treating of the profits which the Abbey of Leicester received, says,

"Ecclesia Sancti Martini respondet communibus annis circa xxi*l*. Solebat reddere xxxvi*l*. xl*l*. vel quaterviginti decem libras; scilicet, ut in anno Domini mcccxlviii; nam circa illum annum Domini Pixis vocat' reddebat x*l*. xi*l*. vel xii*l*. & quandoque xxx*l*. & ultra; Pes Thomæ Lancastriæ respondebat vi*l*. x*s*.; Alta Crux reddebat xi*l*.; Pes Crucis reddebat x*l*. xi*l*. vel xii*l*."

As to the vicarage, Charyte [3] says, "Ordinatio ejus per Hugonem episcopum facta est, ut vicarius ecclesie Sancti Martini habeat ad vestitum suum ii marcas de portionibus altaris, per manum abbatis Leicestrie solvenda; & legata usque ad vi*d*.; & quolibet die solemni i*d*. Habebit victum suum in abbathiâ in omnibus ut canonicus, & diaconus suus sicut major serviens in abbathiâ; & unam dimidiam marce pro stipendio. Præterea habebit panem ad garcionem suum qui ei serviet. Abbas providebit ei mansum competentem, & sustinebit onera ecclesie debita & consueta."

After this, there were several compositions, or agreements, made between the abbot and the vicar for his better subsistence. And whereas he had no certain house belonging to him, he was allowed 8*s*. per annum to provide himself an habitation, till William Charyte, being prior of the abbey, Jan. 1, 1457, purchased from William Wystow, of Great Petelyng, a messuage, with the appurtenances, situate between the tenement lately of Roger Belgrave on the South, and the tenement of Corpus Christi Chantry on the North side, which is said to be worth 16*s*. a year. Whereupon William Charyte says, "Modò vicarius habet mansum honestum & appropriatum, & ii*s*. quâlibet septimanâ per manus procuratoris, & vi*d*. in die Omnium Sanctorum, vi*d*. in die Nativitatis Domini, vi*d*. in die Paschæ, & vi*d*. in die Dedicationis, per manus subcellarii. Item habet omnes decimas minutas, omnes denarios Romanos, & omnia oblata ad Crucem in Vigiliâ Paschatis, & in Die."

"Vicarius Sancti Martini dictos denarios [Sancti Petri] colligit, & eos ad proprios usus conservat. Et nos pro ipsò dictos denarios archidiacono persolvimus.

"Abbas solvit,

"Ecclesie Sancti Martini, Leyc', ix*s*. x*d*. ob. q^{a}.;

"Ecclesie Sancte Marie, ix*s*. x*d*. ob. q^{a}.;

"Ecclesie Sancti Leonardi, ix*s*. x*d*. ob. q^{a}.;

"pro procurationibus, synodalibus, & de-
"nariis Sancti Petri [4]."

In 1534, the vicarage was valued at 6*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. and 10*s*. was paid duobus clericis parochianis [5].

Whatever the profits were that belonged to the Abbey, they were vested in the Crown upon the Dissolution, and by it were transferred to the vicar for the annual rent of 5*l*. whereof 3*l*. still vests in the Crown, and the other 2*l*. per annum has been paid to several proprietors successively since the purchase of them from the Crown in king Charles the Second's time. The 3*l*. still resting in the Crown ssrves to quit the 3*l*. pension which by the Crown is payable to the vicar.

In 1650, the vicarage was returned worth 50*l*. a year; and the minister as sufficient.

The parsonage house of St. Martin's was an humble building for modern times. It was let by Mr. Haines for 40*s*. a year, and was situate between the town library and the dwelling-house of the master of Wigston's hospital; against the South-west door of the church. The house was taken down, and the ground consecrated as an additional burying ground, about the year 1760. The vicar has in lieu an handsome annual allowance.

There was formerly a Well at the end of the church-yard wall, by the Town-hall, now covered. We read of Chapel wells; this was, no doubt, the Church well.

In the new South aile of this church were two chapels; one of them at the East end, called Our Lady's chapel, or choir, where the Consistory Court is now held; the other at the West end, called St. George's chapel.

In the early parts of the churchwardens accompts, which, to the credit of the parish, are now well preserved, are some particulars of charges for repairing these chapels. In one place, in the payments for 1544, "Payd to the plumar for a dais worc on our Lady Chappell;" and, a few years after, is a charge for work done in St. George's chapel, where stood St. George's horse harnessed in the church splendour of those times.

The riding of the George was one of the principal solemnities in this town, as may appear by the express mention of it in an order made at a common hall, 17 Edward IV. which enjoins all inhabitants summoned to attend the mayor to ride against the king (so it is expessed), or for riding the George, or any other thing, to the pleasure of the mayor, and worship of the town.

14 Henry VII. it was ordered, that every one of the 48 should pay towards the upholding St. George's guild; they who have been chamberlains, 6*d*.; and such as had not been so, 4*d*. yearly at least: and 15 Henry VIII. the masters of the gild having neglected the riding of the George, an order was made, enjoining them to do it according to antient custom, between St. George's day and Whitsunday, on pain of forfeiting 5*l*.

The like solemn procession was made from St. Martin's church to St. Margaret's, on Whit Monday, by the vicar, priests and clerks, and the parishioners, as there was from St. Mary's; viz. the image of St. Martin was carried thither, attended by twelve persons with banners, representing the twelve Apostles, each person having the name of the Apostle whom he represented inscribed on parchment. But there was no music, or any canopy carried over St. Martin.

In this church was founded also Corpus Christi guild, which was the chief guild in the town, and contributed largely to the public charges[1]; e. g. in the purchase of charters, &c.; and the masters of it had great interest in the government of the town; having power, with the mayor, to levy penalties on the mayor's brethren for their misdemeanors; and, upon the mayor's neglect they were empowered to levy them upon him.

A licence was granted for founding a chantry in St. Martin's church, 13 Edward III. 16 Richard II. and 2 Henry IV. There belonged to the church, besides the vicar, four chantry priests; and, upon a vacancy of any of them, the masters of the guilds and two churchwardens, with the senior chaplain of the chantry, presented a fit person to the abbot of Leicester, who instituted and inducted him.

The hall belonging to St. George's guild, and the four houses belonging to the chantry priests, were all situated at the West end of St. Martin's church.

The hall is now occupied as the Town-hall; of which see an account in p. 353.

The house belonging to Mr. Steevens, containing, in two spacious rooms, a long range of lights, adorned with the painted glass engraved in Plates XXXVI. XXXVII. p. 514. is supposed to have belonged to the chantry of Corpus Christi.

There were also three altars in the church before the Dissolution: the High Altar, St. Dunstan's, and St. Catharine's; and, probably, the two last stood, one in what is now called Heyrick's chancel, and the other near the entrance into the Vestry.

Leading to the high altar was a fine range of steps, which were taken down in 1645, under the authority of an Ordinance of both Houses of Parliament.

In the Churchwardens Accompts, are many curious entries respecting the sale of what were deemed superstitious articles at the period of the Reformation; of their being reinstated in the short reign of Queen Mary; and their subsequent removal in that of Queen Elizabeth.

On the suppression of Colleges and Chantries, in 1537, the following return was made:

Et remanet clarè per annum		xviii*l.* vii*s.*[2]

"The said chauntry was founded by William Humberston, and John Ive the younger, under the lycens of king Edward III. to th'entente to find iiii priests, to celebrate divine service within the parish church of St. Martin in Leicester, and to pray for the founders' souls; in which parish is 500 houselyng people, and no more priests but only the vicar, whose stipend or lyvyng ys so sore decayed, that he ys not able to fynde any other priest to serve there; so that, without the help of the said chantry priests, many of the said parishioners in time of sickness shall be like to perish, withowte the rites of the church; also the churchwardens, with eleven other housemen [housholders] of the said parish, hath the presentation and election of the same; and at this present time there are but two of the said four priests singing, for that the rents of the same are so far in decay and loss of rent than they have been heretofore.

"And there hath been no lands sold, &c.; and an inventory, &c."[3]

The five following paragraphs are from the MSS. of the late Rev. William Bickerstaffe:

"Under the South-west gallery stairs in this church is a triple frame of oaken seats, like compass chairs, the pommels human heads. The first head, or pommel, a crown or coronet next the stairs, on the left to the sitter; the second, or right pommel from that, a sort of cap highly and broadly edged round; the third from the stairs a plain head uncapped, or worn or broken off; the fourth head broken off entirely; as you face it, the first of the three seats on the left, the only one that turns up, has a moveable sitting-board, through which is a hole wide enough for a very thick wand, more than an inch and half deep; on the reverse, or under, the figure strong in alto relievo of a dragon, or flying serpent, with long talons and expanded wings, colour black-leaden, over two human skulls, at the ends of a curve passing through the scalps; a sight horrid enough to make a little human sensibility shudder! The monster rests upon the lower part of its tail, tied or turned over towards its extremity; one paw only with four nails; two nails much below these, as belonging to the not appearing extremity of the other paw. This frame, which formerly stood on the East side of the South-east door, facing the great walk in the church-yard, over which the church commands the street, the soldiers of King Charles I. might set on fire with menaces when they forcibly entered to check the enemy on the church, who made no small havock of the passing Loyalists. Thus we may account for the burnt appearance of the fore-part of the right hand supporter or foot of the well-timbered cathedræ; or they might fix to the chair one of the noxious assailants, and burn to intimidate the rest. Though I will not deny but some peaceable workmen might fire it carelessly; yet I had rather, encouraging the miraculous and historically interesting incident, incline to the former account[1].

[1] March 12, 31 Hen. VIII. the king having granted to the mayor and common burgesses and inhabitants of Leicester two fairs annually, besides their two antient fairs, towards the charges of the letters patents under the seal of the Dutchy of Lancaster, the masters and wardens, and stewards of the guild of Corpus Christi, and the guild of St. Margaret in Leicester, in name of all the brotherhood, gave out of the said guilds 20*l.* that is, out of each 10*l.*

[2] There is a trifling error in the total; but the several items accord with Mr. Carte's MS.

[3] Certificate of Colleges and Chantries, in the Augmentation Office.

"At the East end of the South aile, and over the Consistory Court, is a portrait of King Charles I. a copy of the picture at the title-page of most editions of Εἰκὼν Βασιλικὴ. Its frame is seven feet and a half from side to side, and about the same in height[2].

"In 1705, there were spacious galleries erected in this church for young people, there being before that time only a loft at the West end of it, called the Scholars' Loft; and the church was handsomely pewed about 1726.

"In the nave are two chandeliers with orbs and branches each; that nearest the reading-desk the gift of Alderman Gabriel Newton, at the desire of his wife Elizabeth [Wells]; whose base was a sensible obstruction to the reader, till the said nave was underdrawn or ceiled, and that with elegance, at 80*l.* expence; the other given at the same time by the Corporation.

"A superb clock with two dials, South-east and North-west, repeating the quarters by four musical strokes at each: the mechanism within is an agreeable object, through the glazier's art. Mr. Arnold, now of Leicester (1790), who prepossessed the parish in his favour, by sounding the steeple harmony of eight delightful bells, and whose genius takes no small range in several departments, has since given farther proofs of his abilities, in two additional bells and chime." [There are now ten light bells.]

At the East end of the nave was formerly a small organ, which, in 1754, was repaired and ornamented with a new case, and placed at the West end of the same aile. This alteration being inadequate to the wishes of the parishioners, some attempts were ineffectually made to obtain a new one, till in 1773 a spirited subscription[3] was begun by the Corporation of Leicester and several individuals of the parish, aided by the warm efforts of the then churchwarden, Mr. William Cart; and the present organ was accordingly opened, in 1774, at the musical meeting described under the Infirmary, p. 523[4].

The following articles were extracted by Mr. Carte from the churchwardens' accompts of St. Martin's:

"1633. There were propositions made to the parish, after the death of Mr. Holmes, by the Lord Keeper (I suppose about settling a revenue for the vicar), which occasioned three or four journeys to London for the churchwardens, 1634, to manage the treaty, but it seems not to have taken effect; only a voluntary augmentation was made by the parish to the next and following incumbents.

"The minister (so far as appears) used to be sent by the Lord Keeper, &c.; but the parish concerned themselves to chuse one in 1646, 1649, 1651, 1652, 1653, 1696, 1697. The parish wrote to the Lord Keeper for one, 1639. They chose several, who refused to accept of it, viz. Mr. Thomas Palmer, of London, 1646; Mr. Herring, of Coventry, 1649; Mr. Richard Pike, 1651-2; Mr. Dixie, of Cadeby, 1653.

"At the ministers' first coming they used to pay the ringers, 1635, 1646; to treat him with wine and biscuit, 1639; with ale, &c. 1649, 1698. They paid the charge of bringing his goods, 1649.

"As for his rights and income, &c. A terrar was made, 1639, 1675. The vicarage-house was repaired by the parish, 1553, 1670, 1671, 1672, 1680; was taken into the churchwardens' hands; and the parish took a house, Dr. Bryan's, for the minister, paid his rent, repairs, and taxes, 1646, 1649. 1653, allowed 5*l. per annum* for a house, and 1654.

Profits: his wages 26*s.* 8*d.* quarterly, 1553; 30*s.* quarterly, 1554; 33*s.* 4*d.* quarterly, 1555; chrysomes 20, 5*s.*; 14 pigs, 5*s.* 10*d.*; other offerings, 12*s.* 2*d.* from Easter till Michaelmas 1555.

"In 1636, given by the parish, 20*l. per annum.*

"In 1646, Tamworth's exhibition made up 80*l. per annum*, raised by a tax, with all other duties; payable within a month after quarter-day, 1649, 1653.

"1656, 20*s.* weekly; for which a tax raised, 1657.

"Monies given him at several times, 1672.

"The King's rent paid by the parish 1562, 1573; allowed towards it, 50*s.* 1669, 1671, &c.

"Tenths paid by the parish, 1562, 1566.

"The minister's seat turned, 1567; mended, 1611, 1630; removed, 1611; sealed, 1612; painted and sised, 1619, 1630; made, 1649.

"Chancel repaired by the churchwardens in 1633.

"The minister sent his note to the churchwarden, to allow money to poor people, 1644.

"The parish paid for supply of the place in the absence of the vicar, 1552.

"Given to the minister, by Mr. John Stanley, 30*s. per annum*; by Mr. James Ellis, 20*s. per annum*; by Mr. Tamworth, 20 nobles.

"They used to give the minister a quart of sack every fast-day, 1643."

"1705. At the bottom of the Brief for All Saints church in Oxford, was an advertisement, signifying a design of publishing the present state of parish churches, and desiring an answer to several queries, whereupon I made the return following[5]:

"The present state of the vicarage of St. Martin:

"1. The parish is situated in the heart of the town, and has no field belonging to it.

The church, before the Reformation, was appropriated to the abbot of St. Mary de Pratis, Leicester, who had it in proprios usus ab antiquo.

	£.	s.	d.
2. The profits now belonging to the vicar are, first, a pension from the Crown (the antient salary of the abbot I suppose)	3	0	0
2. A composition for the poor of Wigston's Hospital, erected in the same parish in the time of Henry VIII.	0	6	8

[1] "There is a like triple frame in the chancel of St. Mary's, on the left of the pulpit stairs, and close to them. The left seat, as that of St. Martin's, turns up, and is decorated underneath with clusters of grapes; the semicircle ex adverso, i. e. under the seat of the first compass chair, over a tree well stemmed, well branched, and well clustered with berries or grapes. There is also a double compass chair on each side of the chancel door at St. Margaret's." W. B.

[2] "The parish books are silent about the time and artist; but, as it leans towards, and is close to, the Consistory or spiritual court, it is supposed to have been executed at their expence, as their triumph and trophy, who fell with him their patron, and whom their gratitude has revived on canvas their tutelar saint. But where is Archbishop Laud, their champion and martyr? There is room for him over his master, and even by his side, locus est & pluribus umbris; what a marvellous change! He, whom in his life-time in 1645 the very women bore arms against to keep him out of this town, is now in quiet possession of that church whose doors he broke open to subdue the annoyance from the leads, as appears by an entry in the parish-book, thus: "Paid Francis Morley for mending the locks of the church-doores, broke by the King's army, three shillings." W. B.—This picture was painted by a Mr. Rowley, some time about the year 1686: the charge of painting, &c. amounted to 10*l.* And I am rather inclined to think that the parish, and not the Spiritual Court, were at the expence of procuring it. J. S. H.

[3] "The Committee appointed to conduct a subscription for erecting a new organ in St Martin's church, humbly presume to solicit the assistance of the gentlemen of the county of Leicester, now in London, and all others who wish to see so laudable an undertaking speedily carried into execution. The agreeable situation of the above church, its lofty and spacious middle aile, with an organ at the West end of it, worth 500*l.* (the sum intended to be laid out), and the variety of elegant seats it contains, it is hoped will be pleasing circumstances to the numerous and polite company which resort to Leicester, at the Anniversary Meeting of the Governors of the County Infirmary. The subscription for the above purpose was opened on the 30th of December last, and now amounts to 438*l.*—Sir John Palmer, bart. and Thomas Cave, esq. have been pleased to add ten guineas each to the above subscription." Advertisement in January 1773.

[4] "In contemplating the inside of this church," says an elegant female writer, "it is curious to draw a brief parallel between its present plain but handsome appearance, and its Catholic magnificence, before the zeal of the Reformation, justly excited, but intemperate in its direction, had, during its career against Romish absurdities, destroyed almost every trace of ornament in our churches. And whilst we survey its present few decorations, its brass chandeliers depending from the elegant cieling of the nave, the beautiful oak Corinthian pillars of its altar-piece, which is ornamented with a picture of the Ascension, by Francesco Vanni (the gift of sir William Skeffington, bart.), and its excellent organ, we can scarcely forbear lamenting the violence with which the magnificent range of steps was torn from its high altar, then hung with draperies of white damask and purple velvet." Walk through Leicester, pp. 134, 135.

9. Henry earl of Huntingdon, president of York, gave several books, which were placed in the church of St. Martin's. This stock was increased by other benefactors; and in 1632 and 1633, upon the motion of John then lord Bishop of Lincoln, this Corporation erected a convenient room at the West end of the church-yard, in which the said books were placed, and considerable additions have been made to them by subsequent benefactors[1].

There is no occasion to answer the rest of the queries. Samuel Carte, minister of the said parish.

Walter Wells, William Foster, } churchwardens."

"In May 1709, the Bishop proposing certain queries relating to the parish, they were answered thus:

1. There are 416 families, in which there are 1984 persons; of which there are 235 Dissenters, viz. four Papists, 191 Independents or Presbyterians, 35 Quakers, and five Anabaptists.

2. There is one meeting of Anabaptists; the persons who teach in it are —— Treen and Thomas Davye, of Leicester, and Zachary Stanton, of Belgrave. They seldom meet except on Sundays; and then sometimes once, and sometimes twice. Their numbers are various; but, upon great concourse from neighbouring towns, are said to be about 150.

3. Within the parish several poor women teach children to spell, and two men teach to read, write, and cast accompts; whereof one, Mr. Thickpenny, has a license; the other, Nathan Tyler, is an Independent, and I suppose has none.

4. No charity-school has been set up in this parish.

5. There is within this parish an hospital called the New, or W. Wigston's Hospital, of which Mr. Archdeacon is confrater, and can give a full account.

6. No lands or tenements have been given for repairs of the church.

7. No abuses or frauds in relation to these establishments.

8. I baptized Sarah Child Feb. 23, 1707-8, who was then 24 years of age, and was not baptized before, because educated by her father and mother, who were both Quakers.

9. I do not know that any who come to church are unbaptized; but several that have been baptized are not confirmed.

10. Of 1749 persons who are not professed Dissenters there are 1157 above 16 years of age; and of these I reckon that about 150 received the Lord's Supper at Easter last.

11. Mr. Watts is removed into St. Mary's parish.

"In 1705, an account was taken and given to me, that there were then in the parish 65 Independents or Presbyterians; six Anabaptists; 13 Quakers; and two Papists. In all, 86. But this account comprehended only those of ripe age.

1709, May 23 and 24, a more exact account was taken of all men, women, and children; and by it there appears to be in the parish 416 families, in which there are 1984 souls, whereof there are 235 Dissenters in 53 families, viz.

191 Independents or Presbyterians, in 42 families.
35 Quakers, in eight families.
5 Anabaptists, in two families.
4 Papists, in one family.

So that of persons not professing themselves Dissenters there are 363 families, and 1749 souls, whereof 1157 are above 16 years of age."

"A Terrar of the houses, lands, goods, rights, and perquisites, belonging to the church, vicar, clerk, and sexton, of the parish of St. Martin in Leicester 1714:

"1. The vicarage house is timber pained, and is covered with slate. The rooms belonging to it are,

"On the first floor, 1. a kitchen, boarded; 2. a very little parlour, boarded, under which is a little cellar, with an earthen floor; 3. a wash-house, paved with pebbles.

"In the second floor there is a space at the top of the stairs, and two chambers floored with plaster.

"The garden or homestall is twenty and one yards long, and four yards and a half broad at the upper end. Its front is to the church-yard on the East; on the North is Town-hall; on the South is Wigston's Hospital; and on the West is the back buildings of the Nag's Head inn.

"2. No glebe land except the church-yard.

"3. It is supposed that all manner of tithes are due to the vicar, partly in right of his vicarage, and partly in right of the rectory, which he holds of the Crown, by payment of 5*l*. per annum, but no manner of tithes are paid, or hath been paid for upwards of 60 years.

"At the erecting of William Wigston's Hospital there was a composition made between the abbot of Leicester as parson and the vicar on one part, and the master and confrater of the Hospital on the other part, whereby the poor of the said Hospital are exempted from payment of tithes, offerings, and mortuaries, &c. in lieu thereof, whereof there is payable by the master of the Hospital, or his deputy, the sum of 6*s*. 8*d*. yearly, on Easter eve, on the high altar of the church, before noon, on forfeiture of 13*s*. 4*d*. more; which agreement was confirmed by William lord bishop of Lincoln, the 10th of July, A. D. 1520, as appears by a copy thereof (in a book) at the end of William Wigston's statutes, in a book in the custody of the mayor of Leicester; but where the original is, whether in the Bishop's Registry, or in the Court of the Duchy of Lancaster, or among the writings belonging to the Hospital, or the Augmentation Office, we know not.

"The Easter offerings are 6*d*. for each person from whom due.

"The surplice fees are, for a chrysom and churching, 1*s*.; for marriage by licence 5*s*. by banns 2*s*. 6*d*. each person who lives in the parish; so that if both parties are of the parish they pay 5*s*. for publishing banns, 6*d*. usually given to the clerk; for a burial in the church-yard 1*s*. in the church 2*s*. in the chancel 2*s*. 6*d*. and for the ground in the chancel 10*s*.

"Mortuaries were antiently due; for, in the composition of Wigston's Hospital, the mortuaries of the master and confrater are expressly reserved, but have not been paid, time out of mind.

"5. Pensions charged on the vicarage are, 13*s.* 4*d.* for tenths, now extinct; 5*l.* to the Crown, at Michaelmas, in lieu of the rectory, whereof 40*s.* is now enjoyed by Peter Apsley, esq. and the remaining 3*l.* continues in the Crown, to quit a pension of 3*l.* due to the vicar from the Crown; 7*s.* 6¾*d.* to the archdeacon, for procurations at Easter, and 1*s.* for synodals at Michaelmas.

"6. For the furniture of the church, chancel, &c. here is the communion table, with a blue carpet; a diaper table cloth; a napkin; a silver chalice, weighing 10 ounces 12 pennyweights; and a patten, four ounces seven pennyweights, without any inscription; two pewter flaggons; a pewter platter, inscribed thus; "This belongeth to St. Martin's church, Leicester, A. D'ni 1677;" two pewter dishes to collect the offerings in.

"For the pulpit, a purple cloth, with a gold fringe and a cushion of the same; an old plain cushion; two brass candlesticks; four pewter candlesticks; a great Bible; one Common Prayer Book for the minister, another for the mayor, and a third for the judges, or other honourable person; a Book of Homilies; Jewell's Defence of the Apology; and Erasmus's Paraphrase on the New Testament; a pewter bason, used at the font and in private baptisms; ten forms, used at communions; a chest for public writings; three surplices; two hoods for the minister; an organ; six bells in the steeple; with a clock and a set of chimes. In the vestry, a wainscot chair, a table, a looking-glass, a chamber-pot, a press with two cloths, two hearse cloths.

"7. No lands or money in stock for the repair of the church or utensils.

"8. The parish repair the church and churchyard fence.

"9. It is the vicar's right to nominate the clerk, but the parish choose the sexton.

"The clerk's wages are, for attending the parish business per annum, 40*s.*; for every burial in the church, chapel, or chancel, 2*s.*; in the churchyard, with a coffin, 1*s.*; without a coffin, 6*d.*; for every marriage, 1*s.*; for every baptism, 6*d.*

"The sexton's wages are from the parish per annum, 56*s.*

"Mr. John Stanley gave 30*s.* yearly to the vicar; Mr. Christopher Tamworth gave money, wherewith was purchased land to the value of 7*l.* per annum in Whetstone, 20 nobles whereof he granted to the vicar to read prayers twice every day in the week.

"And the clerk receives 10*s.* yearly for ringing the bell, and his attendance. These are paid by the chamberlain of the Borough."

The mayor and aldermen, with the town clerk, in their formalities, attend divine service in St. Martin's church on the three grand festival-days. The whole corporation on St. Matthew's day (when the mayor and other corporation officers are chosen); on the Monday after St. Martin (the mayor's feast day); and on the Sunday after St. John's day, when a sermon is preached for the benefit of the widows in St. John's Hospital. The Judges of Assize also attend divine service here; and the Bishop's and Archdeacon's Visitations, and the Ecclesiastical Courts, are held in this church [1].

From the tablet on the South-east wall of the church:

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

The three oldest monuments now remaining in this church are,

In the small South aile, towards the gallery stairs, on a large flat stone, is a tall cross, with a chalice on its side (fig. 9); and an inscription almost vanished, but on which Mr. Bickerstaffe decyphered somewhat like "..... Cardemaker dece'd .... Amen."

In the great chancel the brasses have been torn away from the slab shewn in fig. 10, on which was a kneeling figure, with a canopy over his head; on each side of him a small kneeling figure; at the top a sort of chair of state; and at the four corners shields of arms. It is not easy to say whether it was for an Ecclesiastic, or a Civil Magistrate.

Round about a gravestone at the lower end of the choir, the effigies of a woman, with two escocheons, but defaced, fig. 11 (and partly hid by a pew):

"Orate pro anima Elizabeth nuper ux. Rich. Reginold, de Leyc. mercatoris Stapule Calisie, que quidem Elizabeth filia Joh'i Curzon, de ... shall, armig. & que obiit .. Aug. anno D'ni millesimo CCCCC°XXI°; cujus anime propitietur Deus. Amen."

On the North wall, on a brass plate[8]:

Arms; .... a fess; in chief three lozenges. Crest, a bull's head couped, fig. 12.

"Here under lieth interred the body of Walter Aston, esq. born at Longdon in Staffordshire, who had to wife Joyce, the daughter of —— Nason, gent. of Rowingstone in Warwickshire, by whom he had issue five sons,
viz. Edward, Thomas, Simon, and Walter;
and three daughters, Joyce, Anne, and Katherine;
who departed this life the 30th day of March, anno Domini 1638, and being aged .. years."

Near the aforesaid place, against the side of this, between the great chancel and the choir, are these arms in colours: Quarterly, 1. Argent, on a saltire Azure, five water-bougets Or; Sacheverell. 2. Gules, a stork Argent, ducally gorged Or; Langford. 3. Argent, a lion rampant Sable, crowned Or; Burnell. 4. Gules, three lozenges in pale Argent; Neale. 5. Sable, a lion rampant Argent; Verdun. 6. Argent, three squirrels Gules, playing upon bagpipes proper; Matherley; (fig. 13).

At the bottom of the arms, on a label, is written,

"SACHEVERELL HIS ARMES[9]."

[1] Rector also of Cadeby; where see an account of him, vol. IV. p. 575.—He possessed considerable poetical abilities, and published some hymns. A complaint was once preferred against him in the Ecclesiastical Court, charging him with neglecting to read the Common Prayer in the manner prescribed by law; but the then churchwarden and others making certificate to the contrary, the information does not appear to have been prosecuted. [4] Mr. Carte published two Sermons, in 1694 and 1705; "Tabula Chronologica Archiepiscopatuum & Episcopatuum in Anglia & Walliâ, ortus, divisiones, translationes, &c. breviter exhibens; una cum indice alphabetico nominum, quibus apud authores insigniuntur; concinnata per Sam. Carte, Vic. S. Martini, Leicestr. & explicate per eundem," folio, without date. Part of a letter of his to Mr. Humphrey Wanley, dated Aug. 7. 1710, concerning a tesselated pavement found about 1670, near All Saints church in Leicester, with a drawing of it by B. Garland, is in the Philosophical Transactions, No. 331, p. 324. And his account of that town, in answer to some queries by Browne Willis, esq. (from a MS. in the Bodleian Library) is printed in the Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica.—His assistance to Dr. Willis is gratefully acknowledged in the Preface to the second volume of "Mitred Abbeys;" and to him Dr. Stukeley inscribes his plan of Roman Leicester, plate 92 of his Itinerary, vol. I.—He is said in Letsome's "Preacher's Assistant" to have been vicar of St. Mary's, and in Philosophical Transactions is miscalled vicar of St. Margaret's. Of the last of these misnomers he has himself taken notice of in one of his MSS. which was shewn by Mr. Cole to Dr. Farmer; and the other was a mistake. He was vicar of St. Martin's; and the time of his death, with some traits of his character, will appear from the inscription page 597. This gentleman occasionally presided as official surrogate in the Archdeaconry Court, and was a zealous advocate for the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

[6] Vicar also of All Saints in Leicester.

[7] These three gentlemen have all held also the vicarage of All Saints.

[8] This was copied at the Heralds' Visitation in 1682; but is not now remaining.

[9] This was copied at the same time, and is still preserved.

On the West arch of the chancel gate, in canonicals, in a small niche, kneeling, with a book before him (fig. 14):

"James Andrewe.

Hæc dilectionis pignora ei reponit Margareta conjux ejus charissima. Laus Deo."

A very curious monument, about the middle of the North-west wall, close to the arch, has the busts of John Whatton[2] and his two wives (fig. 15). On this tomb are the following coats, fig. 16—18:

1. Azure, three hedgehogs passant Or; Whatton.
2. Whatton; impaling, Argent, a fess Vair Or and Gules; Heyrick.
3. Whatton; impaling, Argent, ten torteauxes, 4, 3, 2, 1; over all, a label of three points; Babington.

Mr. Whatton has whiskers on his upper lip, and a picked chin beard, his own hair. The second has her hair curled, but flat, like his at top, beads round the neck. The first wife has an handkerchief, with a rose-tie on the stomach, head-covering like a capuchin. The breasts of both are covered. This monument is thus inscribed:

"John Whatton, of the Newark, neare Leicester, an Esquire of the Body of the late King Charles, Justice of Peace for the county of Leicester. His first wife was Elizabeth Orpwood, widow, daughter of Mr. Robert Heyrick, alderman of this town. His second wife was Katherine, daughter of Thomas Babington, of Temple Rodeley, esq.; and by her only he had children, viz. three sons, John, William, and Thomas, and three daughters, Katherine, Mary, and Sence. He died Feb. 16, 1656; in memory of whom his dear surviving wife erected this monument.

"Thus stands the triumph of Death's dart,
That in him wounded many a heart.
His children's tears, his sad wife's groanes,
The widows' and the orphans' moans.
His friends' complaints that laid him here,
Best spake his proper character.
So good, so just, so gracious, that
All did admire, none imitate.
Virtues heap'd up in him did lie
All open by humility.
He shunn'd in public streams to swim,
He sought not honour, it found him.
Though balls of gold lay in his race,
They could not slack his holy pace,
Which if sometimes he stoop'd to take,
'Twas chiefly for the needy's sake.
To schisme he never did incline,
Yet was a compleat Lay Divine,
Whilst Scripture was his doctrine laid,
His holy life the use he made,
A stranger's life i' th' world he spent,
Till to his glorious home he went;
Where now to him the freedom's given,
To be a denizen of Heaven."

On a neat mural monument on the North side of the North aile; fig. 19:

Arms: Argent, on a chevron Azure, three garbs Or; impaling, Azure, on a fess Gules, three hurts between six bezants. Crest, an Indian prince surrendering his sword; over which crest the Corporation arms appear; fig. 20.

"P. M. S.

          { Hæc Aprilis 1, 1737, }   { 47.
Et Aliciæ filiæ unicæ, natæ & denatæ anno 1733."

Near the chancel, on a flat stone, on the North side:

"Underneath lyes the body of Mrs. Martha Sansom, relict of Arnold Sansom, esq.
and only sister of lieutenant-colonel Thomas Fowke, born at Hartenfordbury Park the 1st of May, 1690.
She was lineally descended from the Fowkes of Staffordshire.

"This stone can only tell, in a few words, what would require a history to relate; her charity, good-nature, and excellent parts. She had by Nature what others scarce attain by Art and Application; and from the age of sixteen composed several pieces of poetry on different subjects, which, for their beautiful turn of thought and strength of imagination, have not only met with the approbation, but the admiration of the good, the learned, and the witty.

Friend! whoe'er thou art, wish her soul at rest, who, when living, wished well to the whole world.
Obiit 17th February, 1735-6."

At the steps of the altar:

"The remains of Samuel Carte[3], M. A.

He was a person of great learning,

[1] These words were engraved on a flat stone on the floor.

[2] In 1637, Mr. Whatton was resident in Leicester; and at that time had a sister Collier, who had then two sons, one of them an apprentice in London. The following letter from this gentleman is here printed from the original:

"GOOD SIR, Raunston, the 2d of August, 1639.

"I receaved your letter, and should have bene verie glad to have had your company at the assizes; which, if I had known of your being in towne, I should have sent to desire it; but yt seemeth you had other occasions hindered your cominge. For the other business you write of, yt is indeed likely that I shall marrye a young daughter (in comparison to my yeares) of Mr. Babington's, being betweene five and sixe-and-twentye yeares old: yet of a dossen or more that were motioned to me, both knight's daughters, and knight's and barronet's daughters, and some of greater birth, and others of verie good fashion and quality, before I pitched upon this gentlewoman, and divers since, there hath not bene above two above the age of this, but divers of them younger. I did not hastely resolve on this, but with good considerations, and the approbation and verie good likeing of a verie worthy Divine, and did think that, all things wayed well, she would be the fittest of any that I heard of, and so I thinke still, of others that have been motioned since; she is commended to be verie meeke, humble, and one that will be suteable to my conditions, which I am assured of by a neer freind of mine that hath bene in house with her from her birth; and she hath made as great shew in her words and carriage to me and others that she can affect me, and will carrie herselfe in such a loveing manner as is fittinge as I can desire; which indeed I have bene doubtfull of whomesoever I should mach withall in respect of my age; but, if I doe marry at all, I must make a hazard, and this waye is as likely a waye to prove well as any I can goe, for greater hopes I cannot have; and that was it which I aymed at rather than greatness of birth, friends, or portion, she being one that feareth God, and is of verye good report. I see, to live unmarried will be a verie uncomfortable life for me, which I have had sad experience of since my wife died; and having, I hope, performed those things for her which were fitting, both in her life, at her death, and since, yt is neither unlawful nor discommendable for me to marrye againe, which indeed she on her death-bed did wish and desire. I did seeke to God for his blessing and direction in this business, of so great wayght to me; and I hope his blessing will goe along with me, and make it good and comfortable both for soule and bodye. And thus, good Sir, giveing you thankes for the love and good you write, you have and wish to me, I take leave, and rest your verie loveing kinsman, JOHN WHATTON."

"To the right worshipful his verie loveing unkle sir William Heiricke, knight, at his house in Beaumanor. Present these."

[3] The Rev. Samuel Carte (some of whose publications have been mentioned in p. 596) was son of Thomas Carte, clothier, of Coventry, where he was born Oct. 21, 1652, and was instructed in grammar-learning in the free-school there. He became a member of Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1669; and was matriculated at the same iime into the University, where he took the degree of Arts, that of B. A. 1672; M. A. 1675. In the Oxford Catalogue of Graduates his name is spelt Chart, though in the Matriculus it is spelt right. He received deacon's orders from the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, at Eccleshall, Sept. 21, 1673; priest's from the Bishop of London, at St. James's chapel, June 10, 1677; was collated by the Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry to the prebend of exemplary life and conversation, strict piety, sound judgment, orthodox principles, and a zealous and able[1] defender of the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

He died April 16, 1740, in the 87th year of his age, in full assurance of a joyful resurrection.

"Near this place lie interred Ann, wife, and Elizabeth, daughter, of the said Samuel Carte.

"Here lieth the body of Sarah Carte, who died March 6, 1773, in the 72d year of her age."

Next to Mr. Carte's:

"Sacred to memory.
Under this stone lies buried
Mrs. Hill, widow of Mr. Hill, lately deceased, and daughter of the Rev. Mr. Alfounder, rector of Thurcaston, in this county.
She was trained up from her youth with her venerable father, in a thorough knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.
Her excellent endowments of mind and body, and her extraordinary goodness towards all,
made her universally esteemed,
ever ready in all the duties of her family,
as a wife and mother, sister and friend.
She had few her equals,
chearful in her conversation,
courteous in her behaviour,
a pattern of beneficence, in all its branches.
Her soul thus adorned with heavenly graces,
she resigned to heaven,
and her body to the grave, waiting for a joyful resurrection, to life eternal.
She was born at Thurcaston, Aug. 16, 1683;
she died at Leicester Oct. 18, 1754, aged 71, much beloved and much lamented."

Against the South-east wall:

"Near this place lies interred George,
the only son of Gabriel Newton, gent. by Mary his wife, daughter of George Bent, gent.
He departed this life 8th of March, 1746,
in the 18th year of his age;
to whose memory his affectionate and disconsolate father erected this monument, and with a pious intention cloathed 35 poor boys[2],
and put them out to trades at his own expence, settling 3,250*l.* by his last will,
for a perpetual support of the charity, and for carefully instructing them in toning and psalmody, which you may see more pathetically described 2 Chron. 5. 13.
and for educating them rightly in the principles of our most holy and divine religion;
for, as Denham says,
"All human wisdom to divine is folly,
This truth the wisest man made melancholy,
That man's the greatest monster, without doubt,
Who is a wolf within and sheep without."

On a neat tablet on the North side of the altar:

"In mournful and most affectionate remembrance of the late Elizabeth-Anne Vaughan, wife of Edward-Thomas Vaughan, vicar of this parish, who died in child-bed, January 16, 1808,
aged 26 years.

Reader!

let this early grave remind you to lose no time in preparing for death: let the salvation of Jesus Christ be the one object of your desire and pursuit; seek it with all diligence; but, seek it as the free gift of God: seek it in self-abhorrence, but in the constant and lively exercise of repentance, faith, hope, love, meekness, and every Christian grace; so shall you resemble the beloved person whose earthly remains lie here.

"For if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again; even so, them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him."

1 Thessalonians, iv. 14 v.

On a handsome and lofty monument on the North wall:

"Near this place lieth the body of John Westley, Alderman, and twice Mayor of this Borough, who departed this life in his second Mayoralty
IV February, A. D. MDCCLXIX.
aged LXVII."

Just within the South-east gate, on the floor:

"Here lies the body of Mary, the daughter of Francis Breton, late of Teton in Northamptonshire, esq. and of Mary his wife, who was buried the 22d of May, anno Dom. 1662."

At the South-west end, on the floor (now so broken and defaced as to be illegible):

"Samuel Marshall, here interred, departed Dec. 26, 1671.

"Stroakes not so sharpe, nor many, squar'd a stone
For him, as serv'd to couch him under one;
Nor stroakes did polish halfe so well the tombe,
As the bright soul of him that's to it come."

On the West wall:

"In memory of the Rev. Mr. John Harryman,
M. A. rector of Peckleton,
in this county,
of a most extensive learning,
in his own profession eminent,
not aspiring after more preferment, of much greater deserving,
possessed of many shining qualities, which his modesty would have concealed.
His life was private, yet publickly useful, and suitable to his most Holy Function. He departed this life of Tachbrook in the cathedral church of Litchfield, into which he was installed Sept. 30, 1682. He was presented by sir John Bridgman, of Castle Bromwich, to the vicarage of Clifton upon Dunmore, to which he was instituted March 26, 1684, and inducted March 28, where he lived till 1691; when, for the better education of his children, he became master of the free-school at Coventry; collated by the Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry to the vicarage of Dunchurch, in the county of Warwick, July 2, 1697, inducted July 30; presented by the Lord Chancellor to the rectory of Eastwell, in the county of Leicester, instituted Jan. 7, and inducted Jan. 21, 1698-9; and in the beginning of 1700 he was presented to the vicarage of St. Martin's in Leicester; which depending on voluntary contributions, he held it without institution till the year 1712, when a person surreptitiously obtained from the Lord Chancellor a presentation to it; but was deterred by the affections of the parishioners from prosecuting it; and Mr. Carte was again presented to it, instituted Nov. 21, and inducted Nov. 28, 1712. This latter living Dr. Kippis (in the Biographia Britannica) erroneously supposes that he resigned at the accession of king George the First, as it has been said that he assisted the celebrated Jeremiah Collier, in preaching to a Nonconforming Congregation in Broad-street, London. It was not, however, the vicar of St. Martin's, but his son Thomas Carte, the Historian, who was the occasional assistant to Mr. Collier.—Mr. Samuel Carte continued at Leicester till his death. A high, but I believe very just, character is given of him in the inscription printed above.—Of his three son, Samuel, the eldest, was an eminent solicitor in Chancery; Thomas, the second, was well known as an eminent Historian; and the third, John, was many years vicar of Hinckley. A full account of them may be seen in the Anecdotes of Mr. Bowyer; and of John, in particular, under the History of Hinckley, in this work, vol. IV. p. 744. The titles of his printed Sermons are, 1. "A Dissuasive from Murmuring, London, 1694," 4to; 2. "The Cure of Self-conceit, London, 1705," 4to. His "Tabula Chronologica, &c." was re-printed in Lord Somers's Tracts, first collection, vol. IV. p. 344. His "History of the Town of Leicester" is incorporated in the First Volume of this Work. See p. 596.
June 13, A. D. 1743, ætatis 60 years."

[1] This word is an interlineation on the stone.

[2] The school built by Gabriel Newton in his life-time stood in the South-east corner of St. Nicholas's church-yard. This school was rebuilt in the year 1808. It was probably founded for 35 boys; but the stated number is now increased to 80, who are supported (i. e. cloathed and educated) out of the funds raised by the bounty of Alderman Newton. J. S. H.—On this subject see further under the parish of St. Nicholas.

On

Near the West door of the church is a monument to the memory of John Stephens and Elizabeth his wife, both of whom died in 1782.

On the same side of the church is a plain marble tablet, in memory of John Stephens[1], who died in 1808, aged 75.

Opposite to the South-east door, and on the South wall of the chancel, is an elegant sarcophagus monument, with the following inscripton:

"To the memory of Richard Stephens[2], of this town, and Alice his wife, daughter of John Lettice, B. A. rector of Strixton, in the county of Northampton, this tribute of pious affection, respect and gratitude, is placed by their sons and daughters.
A. S. ob. Sep. 18, 1809, ætat. 64.
R. S. ob. Aug. 11, 1810, ætat. 65."
"The memory of the just is blessed. Proverbs."

On the East-east-by-South side, on a wall tablet:

"Juxta
conditur quod reliquum est
Thomæ Haines,
Omnium Sanctorum in annos quadraginta, hujus ecclesiæ in triginta & amplius vicarii.
Et hominem & ministrum Christi
Contemplator!
In omni vitâ suo officio fungi conatus est.
Obiit ann. Dom. 1786, ætatis suæ 65[3]."

On a flat stone:

"To the memory of William Bentley[4], who departed this life the 10th of January, 1784,
aged 83 years.

"When I lie buried in the dust,
My flesh shall be thy care;
These with'ring limbs with thee I trust,
To raise them strong and fair.

"To the memory of Mary Bentley, the wife of William Bentley,
who departed this life
the 25th day of May, 1759, aged 50 years.
His son William Bentley laid down this stone."

On a tablet on the South-south-east wall:

Arms: Ermine, a griffin segreant, within a border engrailed Azure; fig. 21.

"H. S. E.
Richardus Walker[5], armig.
Vir sæculi planè antiqui,
priscæque Virtutis;
Negotiis solers, & rerum prudens;
Moribus comis, idem & integer;
Et hac nostrâ vitâ apprimè dignus,

Optimo Parenti
Johannes, filius minor,
Ex ex semisse hæres,
Animi in se verè paterni memor,
Hoc qualecunque officii sui monumentum
Mœrens posuit."

On one of the pillars:

Arms: Azure, on a chevron Argent, between three lamps burning Or, a leopard's face between two estoiles Azure; Farmer; fig. 22.

"Sacred to the memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Farmer,
who departed this life
July 25th, 1766, aged 61 years.
"Also of
Thomas Farmer, gent.
who departed this life
Jan. 5th, 1771, aged 63 years.
"And of William Farmer, gent.
who departed this life
Oct. 8th, 1790, aged 76 years."

Near the upper end, on a gravestone:

"The remains of Daniell Morfiun, gent.
one of the aldermen, and once mayor of the Borough of Leicester, aged 88, and changed October the 4th, 1660."

Close to the aforesaid gravestone was another (now removed), with the effigies of a man and woman; round about them,

"Here lieth the body of William Ive, esq. and Jane his wife, which William departed this life
the 31 of October, anno Dom. 1641, which Jane departed the 16 day of May, 1638.
His age 68; her age 73."

Under the communion table still remains:

"Hic sepultum jacet corpus Amie Browne, uxor Thomæ Browne, generosi, ætatis suæ 23, A.D. 1661."

On three gravestones[6] in the North corner:

1. "Here lieth the body of John Whatton, esq.
whose age was 70 years."

2. "Here lieth the body of Mrs. Catherine Whatton, the wife of John Whatton, esq.
She departed this life the 14 day of July,
in the year of our Lord 1673, her age 39."

3. "Here lieth Milicent, daughter of Tiringham Stephens by Milicent his wife, daughter of William Inge, of Thorp Constantine, in the county of Stafford, who departed this life
the 20 of February, anno Domini 1674."

On a flat stone[7] in the middle:

"William, the son of Bartholomew Cradock, of Farndon in Northamptonshire, died Feb. 24, 1661."

Near the lower end:

"Here lieth the body of William Franke, esq.
once mayor of this Borough, and once high sheriff of the county of Leicester. He had to his first wife Alice, the daughter of Richard Ludlam, twice mayor of this Borough, who departed this life Jan. 20, 1661, and lieth here interred. He had to his second wife Alice, the daughter of Gilbert Armstrong, of Rempston, in com. Nottingham, esq. by whom he left one son, viz. William, obiit March 29, anno Domini 1679, ætatis 67."

At the lower end of the chancel[8], on a gravestone:

"Hic jacet Gulielmus Heaward, gener. quondam hujus curiæ procurator, qui obiit 17° Aug. 1661."

Near the aforesaid:

"Here lies the body of Francis, the son of Francis Breton, late of Teton in Northamptonshire, esq. and of Mary his wife, who was buried the 16th day of January, anno Dom. 1663."

In the chancel:

"Here lyeth interred Captain John Cochran, who served in the Navy and Army

---

[1] John, son of John and Elizabeth Stephens, was never married; but constantly resided with his younger brother Richard, with whom he was in partnership.

[2] The town of Leicester lost, in Mr. Richard Stephens, an able and zealous promoter of its interests and its prosperity. He was the first, and an active commissioner of the property-tax, which honourable, though odious office, he discharged with fidelity to his king and his country: no private feeling, nor private friendship, made him swerve from that line of conduct which his conscience dictated. His knowledge of inland navigation was very extensive: he was unanimously elected chairman both of the committee and of the half-yearly meetings of the proprietors of the Leicester navigation. Upon every public occasion, which called forth the liberality of the inhabitants of the town, he was always conspicuous. His subscriptions and donation to the Infirmary, to the Humane Society, to the relief of the poor, to the assembly-rooms, and theatre, &c. &c. will bear sufficient testimony.

[3] This gentleman acquired an ample fortune in the banking line; and to young men in business, whom he found steady, he was exceedingly useful.

[4] The above epitaph was composed by the late Rev. Mr. Gregory, vicar of this parish. J. S. H.

[5] See his wife's epitaph at Little Stretton, vol. III. p. 738.

[6] These, it is believed, are now covered over with basses, forms, &c. &c. J. S. H.

[7] This is supposed to have been taken up.

[8] Several stones have evidently been taken up; and as I cannot find this or the two that follow, I apprehend they are removed. J. S. H.

in the reign of Queen Anne, George I. and II.
upwards of 50 years.
He departed this life May 19, 1756,
aged 66 years.
"And Charlotte Cochran his wife, aged 66 years."

"Here lieth the body of Mr. Richard Hill, attorney at law. He was beloved in his family, respected by his acquaintance, deservedly gained the character of a fair and skilful practitioner in his own profession, and of a prudent and honest man in all his dealings. He died Dec. 1, 1739, aged 59, in full hope, through Christ's merits, of a joyful resurrection to life eternal."

"Here lyeth the body of Mr. Samuel Woodland, alderman, and once mayor of this Borough, who departed this life Aug. 29, 1712, aged 66 years.
"Also the body of Mary Woodland his second wife, who died Feb. 18, 1732, aged 68 years.
"Also the body of John Woodland, son of the said Samuel and Mary Woodland,
who died March 31, 1728, aged 37 years.
"Here lyeth interred the body of Mary Woodland, the wife of Samuel Woodland, who was the eldest daughter of Thomas Cradock, of Farndon, in the county of Northampton, gent.
who departed this life for a better Dec. 26, 1679.
"Samuel, the eldest son of Samuel Woodland by Mary his second wife, departed this life
Aug. 24, 1689, being the 7th year of his age.
"Edward the second son departed this life
Sept. 17, 1689, being the 2d year of his age.
"Matilda the second daughter departed this life the 12th of June, 1690, being the 1st year of her age.
"Mary their eldest daughter departed this life the 31st day of August, 1697, being the 12th year of her age."

"Here lyeth interred the body of Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Fisher, gent. of Repton, in the county of Derby, and daughter of Mr. Samuel Woodland by Mary his wife, who died the 8th of June, 1735, aged 37."

"William, son of the late Rev. William Bainbrigge, and grandson to William Bainbrigge, of Hugglecoate Grange, in this county, esq. deceased, was born the 29th of December, 1782, at Fort St. George in the East Indies, and departed this life, at Leicester, the 10 day of January, 1787."

"Near this place are deposited the remains of John Gregory [1], late alderman, and once mayor of this Borough. He passed through life with integrity and honour, respected by all who knew him; and died at the Adelphi Hotel, London, March 22, 1789, in the prosecution of a public good, the navigation and commerce of the Town of Leicester, ætat. 62.
"Also of Frances, relict of Thomas Gregory, who died 11th April, 1795, aged 71 years."

Close to the preceding:

"To the memory of
the Rev. Joseph Gregory, 16 years vicar of Saint Martin's and All Saints, Leicester.
He died 26th February, 1802,
aged 40 years.

On the floor:

"Here lies the body of Elizabeth Cradock, daughter of Alderman Johnson, of the Borough of Leicester, and wife to Edmund Cradock, who died in July 1731, aged 49 years.
"Near this place is likewise interred Anna Maria, daughter of the said Edmund Cradock, which died in October 1741, in the 25th year of his age.
"Samuel Cradock, the son of the abovementioned Edmund and Elizabeth, who died the 31st of October, 1746, in the 23d year of his age, is buried under this stone."

On a mural tablet (Arms as above):

"Here lie deposited the remains of Joseph Cradock, who was born
the 17th of Nov. 1689, and died
the 20th of April, 1759.
"Enough that Virtue fill'd the space between,

A Latin epitaph in this church on a brass plate for Mr. Tiffin, confrater of Wigston's Hospital, who died in December 1754, has been removed to make way for a modern tomb [3].

About the walls of the East, North, and South sides of a chapel at the East end of the North aile, commonly called The Heyrick's chancel, are several inscriptions:

1. On an upright slate in the North-west recess, on its North-west-by-East side:

"Here lieth buried the bodie of John Heyricke, of this parish, who departed this life the 2d of Aprill, 1589, being about the age of 76. He did marry Marie, the daughter of John Bond, of Wardend, in the county of Warwicke, esq. who lived with the said Marie in one house full fifty-two years, and in all that tyme never buried man, woman, nor childe, though they were sometimes 20 in housholo. He had yssue by the said Marie five sons and seven daughters, viz. Robert, Nicholas, Thomas, John, and William; and daughters Ursula, Agnes, Marie, Elizabeth, Ellen, Christian, and Alice. The said John was mayor of this town in the year 1559, and again in 1572. The said Marie departed this life the 8th of December, 1611, beinge of the age of 97 yeares [4]. She did see before her departure, of her children, and children's children, and their children, to the number [5] of 142."

2. The next upright slate adjoining on the right:

"Here lyeth the body of Robert Heyrick, ironmonger, and alderman of Leicester, who had been thrise maior thereof. He was eldest son to John Heyrick and Marie; and had 2 sons and 9 daughters by one wife, with whom he lived 51 yeares.

At his death he gave 16 pounds 10 shillings a yeare to good uses.

He lived 78 yeares; and after dyed very godly, the 14th of June, in the yeare 1618.

All flesh is grasse; both yonge and old must die;
And so we passe to judgment by and by."

3. On the next upright slate:

Arms: Vert, a fess between three boars' heads couped in chief, and in base three crosses pattée, 2 and 1, Argent; Orpwood; impaling Herrick; fig. 24.

"Here lyeth buried the bodie of Robert Orpwood, citisen and goolldsmith of London, born in Abingdon, in the county of Berks. He departed this life the 23 of August, in anno D'ni 1609. Hee did marry with Elizabeth Heyricke, the daughter of Robert Heyricke, of this parrishe, and one of the Aldermen of this Incorporation."

4. On another upright slate:

"Hic jacet Elizabetha, uxor Roberti Orpwood generosi predicti, defuncti, necnon Johannis Whatton, corporis regiæ majestatis armigeri relicti, quæ migravit in æternitatem decimo septimo Augusti, anno Domini 1638, ætatis suæ 64. A speciall benefactrix, and of sacred memory in this corporation; wherein if any parallel her..."

On the North wall there is a fair monument, with the arms and crest of Heyrick (the inscription not now legible) for sir William Heyrick[1], knight; who married Joan, daughter of Richard May, of Mayfield in Sussex, esq. by whom he had seven sons and five daughters, and died March 2, A. D. 1652, æt. 96.

On the floor:

"Sir William Heyrick was here buried March 8, 1652."

On another mural tablet:

"M. S.
G. Heyrick.

On the same wall:

Arms: Herrick; impaling, Argent, on a chief Gules, a lion passant guardant Or, crowned of the last; Noble; fig. 25.

"Here lies interred Martha, the [first] wife of Thomas Herrick, of this Borough, gentleman, who was the younger daughter of
Thomas Noble, of the same Borough, esq.
She departed this life 17th May, 1723, aged 24."

Against the North wall:

Arms: Azure, on a fess Or, between six bezants three hurts; Bent; fig. 26.

"Here lieth interred the Arms; Bent; impaling, Per bend sinister Ermine and Argent, a lion rampant Sable, fig. 27.

"Near this place lieth interred George Bent, gent. late of this parish, aged 67. He died Jan. 13, 1730.
"Also George Bent his son, late one of the aldermen, and once mayor of this Borough, died the 20th
May 1736, aged 48.
"Also Alice, the wife of George Bent, Gent. departed this life the 6th day of April, 1737, aged 70 years."

Against the South wall, at the lower end:

"Siste, viator.
Ecce tibi depositum Mariæ uxoris Francisci Noble,
gen. honore prætorio bis decorati. En matrona pietate nullisque non ornata virtutibus; &, inter decora sui sexûs meritò numeranda, cum marito anno 36 suavissimè convixit; tandem verò, matura cœlo, valedixit viro; & abiit, non obiit, 15 Aug. 1675, ætatis 62."

Near the aforesaid place:

"Here lieth interred the body of Armestrong, daughter of Gilbert Armstrong, of the county of Nottingham,
esq. who died June 11, 1669."

"Jane, wife of Simon Barwell, gent. died A. D. 1703."

On the South side of the said chapel:

"Here lieth the body of Francis Noble, gent.
who was twice mayor of this Burrough of Leicester, and departed this life the 13th day of December, anno Domini 1689, ætat. suæ 78."

On a flat stone in the North aile:

Arms: 1. Herrick; impaling, Paly of six, Argent and Azure, on a chief Gules, a lion passant reguardant Or; Bakewell; fig. 28.

"Here lies interred Katherine, the wife of Thomas Herrick, of this Borough, gentleman, and daughter of Robert Bakewell, of Swepston in this county, gentleman, deceased, by Ruth his wife. She departed this life March 26, 1730, aged 23."

The five which follow were transcribed by Mr. Carte from the floor of the same chapel, but are not now to be found:

1. On an old blue stone, stript of its brasses:
"James Andrews, twice mayor of Leicester, who died A. D. 1627, æt. 75."

2. "Robert, son of Robert Hickling, gent. who died April 28, A. D. 1687, æt. 28."

[1] Good portraits of sir William Heyrick and his Lady, with a particular history of their branch of this antient family, may be seen in vol. III. p. 152; to which may be added the following anecdote, preserved by Mr. Samuel Clarke, pastor of the church of Christ in Bennet Finch, London, in a publication dated "from my Study in Threadneedle-street, this 20th of November 1656:" The lady Herrick living at her house in Leicestershire in the time of our late wars, there came one to her, and told her, that, if she staid in her house, a party of the King's soldiers would come presently, and take her away prisoner. She thanked him, and retired herself to seek unto God by prayer for direction, and was encouraged to stay. Presently after came another, with the same message, importunately desiring her to absent herself. She thanked him also; and again retired unto prayer, and was still encouraged. Then came a third messenger, from justice Babington; and she, as before, sought to God for direction; but found her former confidence abated: yea, the more she prayed, the more her heart failed her. Whereupon she left her house; and immediately came in a troop of soldiers, which searched all the house for her. This she told my reverend friend Master White." It appears that his reverend friend Master White lived in Leicestershire. This was probably Mr. Thomas White, the vicar of St. Martin's (see p. 595).—In the same publication Mr. Clarke gives a wonderful account of a miller that was murdered at Lutterworth.

3. "Mary, daughter of sir William Herrick, of Beaumanor, who died Sept. 20, A. D. 1628, æt. 20."

4. "Thomas, the only son of Francis Noble, who died Dec. 6, A. D. 1655, æt. 3."

5. "Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Armstrong, of Rempston, in the county of Nottingham, esq. who died June 11, A. D. 1669."

In St. Mary's chapel, where now the Consistory is, there are, on the floor, the following inscriptions, covered with a range of new seats:

1. "Nicholas Lisle, gent. of Palmers in the Isle of Wight, who died March 28, A. D. 1711, æt. 28."

2. "Andrew Freeman, son of Henry Freeman, of London, gent. who died June 1, 1680."

3. "Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Palmer, of Leicester, gent. late wife of Thomas Newdigate, of Hawton, in the county of Nottingham, esq. third son of sir Richard Newdigate, bart. She died June 10, 1712."

4. "Edward Palmer, gent. who died July 14, 1687, æt. 74; as also Anne, wife of Thomas, son of the said Edward Palmer, who died May 28, A. D. . . . . . æt. 26; and also Henry, son of the said Edward Palmer, who died Dec. 16, 1692."

On a tablet on the North wall of the South chancel:

"Near this place lie
the remains of Samuel Simpson[1],
alderman, and once mayor of this Borough.
He died the 14th day of May, 1788,
aged 77 years.

"Elizabeth, his wife died May 6, 1795,
aged 77 years.

"William Simpson, son of the above
Samuel and Elizabeth, died August 10, 1798,
aged 41 years."

By the South gate of the chancel, without, is this elegant, truly poetical, and pathetic epitaph, said to be written by her brother the Rev. Mr. Lettice:

"Here lieth the body of Mary Lettice, who departed this life June 11, 1770, aged 34 years.
Now, should this tomb the stranger's step arrest,
The virtues of its tenant to proclaim,
He'd judge the eulogy by flatt'ry drest,
Or ostentation catching at a name.
Then silent rest her unambitious tomb:
She needs no fame sepulchral praises breath:
Affection drops its tribute in their room,
And her own conscience twines th' immortal wreath."

"Sacred to the memory of Edward Hodges,
who departed this life,
on the 18th of January, 1801,
aged 60 years;
and of Martha his wife, who died on the 22d of April, 1789,
aged 45 years.

"Also three of their children, who died infants."

On a tablet over the vestry door:

"In memory of John Throsby[2], who was born in 1740,
and died February 3rd, 1803.
He was 32 years Parish-clerk;
of a peaceful disposition, lived respected; and died an humble
Member of the Church of Christ."

On the South side of the vestry:

"Mr. William Lee, alderman, and twice mayor of this Borough,
died August 1, 1759, aged 68.
He married Penelope, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Goode, rector of Weldon, in the county of Northampton; and she dying without issue, he married Ann, daughter of Mr. John Ludlam, alderman of Leicester, and by her had issue Mary Lee, who died March 27, 1766, aged 37;
and the Rev. Mr. John Lee, rector of Burton Overy, in this county, and who, from filial piety and fraternal affection ordered this tribute of respect to be paid to their memory."

"Here lieth Mary, the wife of Arden Elsmere, gent. who departed this life the first day of August, in the year of our Lord 1712, aged 46.

"Here also lieth the abovenamed Arden Elsmere, gent. who departed this life the fourth day of Sept. in the year of our Lord 1714, aged 47."

Arms: Herrick; impaling, Gules, two bars; a chief Or, three crosses pattée Gules; Winstanley; fig. 29.

"Near to this place lie the remains of Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Herrick, of this Borough, gent. and daughter of James Winstanley, late of Braunston, in this county, esq. who departed this life the 10th day of January, 1757, aged 49 years."

"To the memory of Thomas Herrick, gent.
A good father, a good friend, and a good citizen.
Ob. 10th Dec. 1766, æt. 73 years."

On a flat stone in the North aile:

Arms: Gules, three chevrons Vairè; Turvile; impaling Bent; fig. 30.

"Anne Turvile, wife of Richard Turvile, gent. and second daughter of William Bent, gent. died May 1, 1718, in the 27th year of her age."

On a flat stone in the North aile:

Arms of Barwell, between his two wives, Argent, three martlets between two bars Gules; impaling, 1. Newton; 2. Major; fig. 31.

"Here lieth interred the body of Simon Barwell, late of the Borough of Leicester, gent. who departed this life 24th June, 1720, aged 57 years; who married for his first wife Jane, the daughter of William Major, late of the same Borough, gent.; and for his second, Anne, the widow of Babington Bradley, late of the same Borough, M. D. and daughter of Robert Newton, of the city of London, grocer, by whom he had issue one only daughter, viz. Anne.

"Here also lieth Anne, the wife of the said Simon Barwell, who died 4th May, 1723, aged 47."

The following arms were on a monument in the South aile, which is now not to be found:

Barwell, on an escocheon of pretence . . . a cross moline . . . . on a canton a gauntlet . . . . . for Topp; fig. 32.

[1] This gentleman was profoundly skilled in the Hebrew language.

[2] Mr. Throsby, for whom I had a very sincere regard, died in his 66th year, after a lingering illness, which he supported with patient fortitude and pious resignation. He was a man of strong natural genius; and, during the vicissitudes of a life remarkably chequered, rendered himself conspicuous as a draughtsman and topographer. He attempted many expedients for the maintenance of a numerous family, few of which answered his purpose; and his last days would have been shaded with penury and disappointment, but for the assistance of those friends who knew his worth, and justly appreciated him as a man of honesty, integrity, and merit. His publications were, "The Memoirs of the Town and County of Leicester, 1777," 6 vols. 12mo. 2. "Select Views in Leicestershire, from original Drawings, 1789," 4to. 3. "A Supplementary Volume to the Leicestershire Views, containing a Series of Excursions in the Year 1790, to the Villages and Places of Note in the County, 1790," 4to. 4. "The History and Antiquities of the antient Town of Leicester, 1791," 4to. 5. "Letter to the Earl of Leicester, on the Roman Cloaca, or Sewer, at Leicester; with some Thoughts on the Jewry Wall, 1793," 8vo. 6. "Thoughts on the Provincial Corps raised, and now raising, in Support of the British Constitution at this aweful Period, by a Private in the Leicestershire, 1795," 8vo. 7. "Thoroton's History of Nottinghamshire, re-published with large Additions, and embellished with Picturesque and Select Views of Seats of the Nobility and Gentry, Towns, Villages, Churches, and Ruins, 1797," 3 vols. 4to. See an epitaph on his father, p. 604.

At the upper end of the choir, on a gravestone:

"Hic etiam Robertus Hickling, fil. Roberti Hickling, gen. & Susanna uxor ejus, filia Johannis Herick, gen. ob. 28 April. 1667, æt. suæ 28."

In St. George's chapel:

Arms: Argent, a chevron between three cross molines Gules; Cheselden; impaling, a chevron between three leopards' faces; fig. 33.

"George Cheselden, M. D. who died 6th March, 1736."

On another tomb, not now remaining, were these arms: Cheselden; impaling, a lion rampant ...... debruised with a bend; fig. 34.

On a tablet on the wall of the small South aile:

"In this porch, near several of his sons, one of whom, named Charles, died August 5, 1770, aged 35 years, are deposited the remains of Philip Hackett, gent.
son of the late Rev. Philip Hackett, rector of South Croxton, vicar of All Saints, and confrater of Wigston's Hospital; he practised many years as a proctor in the Ecclesiastical Court of the Archdeaconry of Leicester[1]; and departed this life on the 16th day of August, in the 63d year of his age, and that of Christ 1770.
If the tender husband, the kind parent, the liberal benefactor, the friend of the poor, and the best of masters; if the strictest fidelity and humanity, the most inviolable attachment to friendship, and the truest regard to the rights of society, acquire the attention due to so amiable a pattern; the deceased will never die, whilst the gratitude of contemporaries exists, and posterity is mindful of good examples.

"Also are deposited the remains of Thomas Hackett, gent. a proctor of the Spiritual Court, son of the above
Philip Hackett, gent.
deceased Aug. 7, 1781, aged 41 years."

At the upper end of the South aile:

Arms: the sun in splendour; Dyson; fig. 35.

"Hic jacet corpus ..... Ra. Dison, gen......
18° die Octobris, anno D'ni 166 ... ætatis 51."

On a gravestone lying at the South door, in 1683:

Arms as before.

"Hic jacet corpus Radulphi Dison, gen. qui ob. s'c'do die Novembris, anno D'ni 1675."

Near the middle of the South aile:

"Here lyeth the body of Andrew Freeman, son of Henry Freeman, of London, gent. who departed this life the 2d day of June, anno 1680."

In the South aile, and contiguous to the Consistory Court:

"Near this place lie interred the remains of Joseph Cleadon, apparitor, who departed this life June the 8th, 1786,
in the 70th year of his age.

"A wit's a feather, and a chief's a rod,
An honest man's the noblest work of God."

"Near this place lie interred the remains of Mr. Joseph Simpson, who died Jan. 28, 1787, aged 76 years.

"Also the remains of Mrs. Deborah Woodcock his sister, who died Feb. 20, 1779, aged 70 years."

"In memory of Henry Gutheridge, gent. one of the aldermen, and once mayor of this Borough. He departed this life Feb. 14, 1775, in the 62d year of his age."

"To the memory of Mary, the wife of William Capp, and daughter of Thomas and Margaret Foden, of Congleton in Cheshire, who departed this life the 7th day of August, 1786, aged 35 years."

"Near this place are interred the remains of Mr. James Willey,
one of the aldermen of this Borough,
who departed this life 3d October, 1802,
in the 73d year of his age."

"To the memory of John Gamble, esq.
alderman, and once mayor of this Corporation,
who died at Buxton, aged 69,
23d September, 1789.
This monument, as a tribute of gratitude to a deceased friend, was erected by Henry Watchorn, esq. of the Newark, Leicester."

"Sacred to the memory of Henry Carrick[2], gent.
who died 9th January, 1809,
aged 65 years."

On a brass plate near the window at the West end of the South aile:

"P. M. S.
Mariæ,
Johannis Ward uxoris dilectissimæ;
Reverendi Johannis Newton, hujus ecclesiæ quondam pastoris,
filiæ charissimæ;

Mary, the wife of Benjamin Dowley, and two of their children."

Under the organ-loft:

"Near this place lieth the body of Elizabeth, the wife of Thomas Lockwood, and daughter of Mr. Thomas Stephens.
She departed this life the 3d day of September, 1784,
in the 47th year of her age."

"Near this place lie the remains of John Stephens, who departed this life the 15th day of Nov. 1782, aged 74 years.

"Also the remains of Elizabeth his wife, who died the 30th day of August, 1782, aged 68."

"Near this place are deposited the remains of Thomas Marshall, who departed this life on the 24th day of January, 1737, in the 39th year of his age.

"Likewise the remains of Elizabeth his wife, who departed this life on the 22d day of January, 1776, aged 71 years."

"Near this place are deposited the remains of Richard Earle, esq. who departed this life the 19th of December, 1775, aged 73 years.

"Likewise the remains of Elizabeth his wife, who departed this life the 4th day of April, 1740, aged 31 years."

"Sacred to the memory of Edward Mortimore, gent.
lieutenant and adjutant of the Leicestershire militia.
He departed this life March 30, 1779, aged 44.

---

[1] He was parish clerk of this parish upwards of 30 years, and was killed by a fall from his horse. The above inscription on his monument was written by Mr. Bickerstaffe.

[2] This gentleman taught school at Leicester for nearly half a century.

"Also of Mary, relict of
Edward Mortimore, gent.
She departed this life
the 20th of January, 1782, aged 34.
"Susanna Mortimore, (daughter of the above) died Feb. 6, 1780, aged 2 years."

On a small neat tablet, on the wall of the South aile:

"In memory of
Mary, the wife of Caleb Lowdham, gent.
She died May 27, 1785,
in the 40th year of her age."

On a North pillar, on a neat tablet of white marble:

"To the memory of Susanna Pepin, who died Oct. 29, 1790, aged 30 years."

In the nave:

"In hopes of a joyful immortality, are deposited near this place
the earthly remains of William Oswin, late of this Borough, who died Sept. 7, 1786,
in the 53d year of his age."

Near the pulpit:

"In memory of
Mrs. Martha Vowe, daughter of Mr. Richard Vowe, late of this place;
a lady remarkable for the constancy of her devotions, and the sincerity of her friendships.
She died 6th January, 1804,
in the 75th year of her age.
Farewell! dear friend, till we do meet again!"

In the North aile:

"Sacred to the memory of Sarah Read, wife of
Mr. Alderman Read, and daughter of Captain David Haldane, of Auchterander, in the county of Perth, Scotland.
She died November 16th, 1809,
aged 59.
"How lov'd, how valued once avails thee not,
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of dust alone remains of thee,
'Tis all thou art, and all the proud shall be."

Near to the foregoing:

Arms: Argent, a chevron between three crosslets fitchée Sable; fig. 36.

"Ensign Samuel Davenport, of the Hon. Colonel William Handasyde's regiment of foot, son to George Davenport, of Calveley, in the county of Chester, esq.
He died Dec. 22, 1741, aged 23 years."

On a pillar at the end of the North aile:

Arms: . . . . . two chevrons . . . . . between three flies erect, fig. 37.

"Near this place is interred the body of Thomas Phipps,
who in the first year of this [the eighteenth] century entered into life in this county, and continued in the same till his death in the year 1768.
While he lived,
he made it his chief concern to live usefully,
and to die not without having been serviceable.
In the year 1750 he was advanced to the dignity of the Mayoralty of this Borough, which high office he served with distinguished reputation.
He maintained the highest reverence and unreserved confidence in God; to which,
as he himself oftentimes piously acknowledged,
he owed his own success, and that of his family.
He in general enjoyed a chearful temper of mind, and a good constitution of body;
the one the natural result of his integrity, and the other of his temperance.
After a most painful illness, which he bore with true Christian fortitude, he quitted this mortal life, in full assurance of a glorious resurrection to life eternal.
"Also, near this place is interred the body of Ann Phipps, the wife of Thomas Phipps, who departed this life Jan. 10, 1786, aged 89 years."

On a South pillar near the chancel (Plate XLIV.):

"In memory of
Mr. John Johnson, late of this parish,
who died Jan. 25, 1780,
aged 72.

"Also of Frances his wife who died Oct. 19, 1776, aged 69.

Honour thy father and mother[1]."

On the opposite pillar:

"Nicholas Throsby was born in the year 1699;
was chosen mayor of this Borough in 1759;
and died A. D. 1782[2].
Religion taught him to look towards the peaceful regions of Eternity; the prospect of which, when compared with this fleeting, uncertain, and momentary existence, he found full of consolation."

Arms: Or, a pile Sable; on a canton Azure, a saltire engrailed Argent; Goodall; fig. 38.

"Near this place lyeth the bodys of John Goodall, late of yᵉ Borough, and twice mayor of the same. He died 8th Aug.
1724, aged 84; and of Sarah his wife, the daughter of Abraham Roe, citizen of London, by whom he had 7 sons and 4 daughters."

In the church-yard:

On four stones set against a tomb in the church-yard, the four stones lying against the middle of each side of the tomb, with the arms of the Town:

"Here lieth Edward Seamer, who departed this life the 1 day of Septemb. . . . ."

"In memory of Elizabeth Brett.
. . . . The rageing sea, by a fierce tyd, Swept her away, and so she dy'd,
the fifth day of June,
Anno { Domini 1704.
{ ætatis suæ 28."

"Here lies the body of Mary,
the wife of John Marston, who died the 17th day of Sept. 1760,
in the fifty-ninth year of her age.
Reader, permit some short suspence to grieve,
One silent tear to flow, one sigh to heave;
Whilst her dear memory wakes my hope I smart,
And her fresh image wrings my aching heart."

"In memory of John Lambert, senior, who departed this life the 30th day of July, 1760, aged 61 years[3].
"Also Ann his wife died April 11th, 1765, aged 70 years."

"Here lyeth interred the body of William Page, senior, who departed this life Dec. 18, 1762,
in the 52d year of his age.
His wearysome nights are turned to joyful dayes."

[1] This monument does equal credit to the worthy designer, the son of the deceased, the charitable founder of the Consanguinitarium (see p. 528); and to the artist, the late John Bacon, esq. R. A.

[2] Father to the intelligent communicator of many particulars in this History, of whom see p. 602. Martha his second wife, died Oct. 6, 1797. She had been, for several years prior to her death, the oldest person in Leicester, and retained her memory to nearly the last hour of her existence; since about the year 1750 she had enjoyed, in general, a good state of health; and walked in the garden the preceding week, and to church the latter end of last year. Through life she lived abstemiously, and would frequently tell her grandchildren to rise from table with an appetite. She was born in the first year of the eighteenth century; and consequently lived in the reigns of William III. Anne, and the Three Georges.

[3] He was County Gaoler; and, in his profession, a man of great humanity.

"To the memory of Elizabeth Middleton, who departed this life the 13th of September, 1775,
aged 37 years.
Blest with discernment and a peaceful mind,
In hope she liv'd, an after-bliss to find:
On earth, to heaven she made her humble way;
Religion taught her there to fix her stay.
Happy are they who make that wish'd-for shore,
Where pleasures reign when Death and Time's no more."

"Enquiring mortal, whoe'er thou art, ponder here on an incident which highly concerns
all the progeny of Adam.
Near this place lieth the body of JOHN FENTON [1], who fell by violence May 17, 1778, and remains a sad example of the incompetency of Juridical institutions to punish a Murderer!
He left, to mourn his untimely fate,
a mother, a widow, and two children.
These, but not these alone,
are greatly injured;
Personal security received a mortal wound when vengeance was averted from his assassin by the sophistical refiners of natural justice [2].
Obiit anno ætatis suæ 32."

"Here lieth the body of Elizabeth, the third daughter of Thomas Ayscough, by Anne his wife, who died June the 27th, 1747, aged 23."

"Here lie the remains of Anthonina Greatorex, who was born Oct. 2, 1762, and died July 20, 1767.
Harmonious soul! took'st thou offence,
At discords here, and fled'st from hence?
Or, in thy sacred raptures, hear
The music of Heaven's warbling sphere?
Then mounted straight where Angels sing,
And Love does dance on ev'ry string."

"Here rests her head upon the lap of earth Hannah Grundy, daughter of Charles and Sarah Grundy, late of Carlton, near Market Bosworth in this county.
She came up and was cut down like a flower, on the 13th day of January, in the 20th year of her age,
in the year of our Lord 1788."

"To the memory of Ann, the wife of William Hudson, who departed this life
Oct. 9, 1790, aged 34 years.
"Also two of their sons, who died in their infancy."

"To the memory of Nathaniel Eames, who died the 23d day of February, 1791, aged 45 years.
Reclin'd at rest beneath this humble stone,
Are the poor, shrunk, but dear remains of one,
With merit humble, and with virtue fair,
With knowledge modest, and with wit sincere;
Upright in all the social calls of life,
To friend, to daughter, sister, and to wife.
So just the disposition of his soul,
Nature left Reason nothing to controul.
Firm, pious, patient, affable of mind,
Happy in life, and yet in death resign'd."

"In memory of John Ball,
who departed this life Feb. 22, 1800, aged 81. She lived servant in one family 65 years, serving faithfully grandfather, father, and son.
Well done, good and faithful servant!"

"Thomas Taylor died Jan. 28, 1769, aged 83."

"John Cartwright (mayor in 1771) died April 26, 1783, aged 66."

"James Page, gent. died April 1, 1797, in the 66th year of his age."

On a white stone near the small South door:
"In memory of Moses Wing, who departed this life the 11th day of June, 1785,
aged 24 years.
How little they who think aught great below;
All our ambitions Death defeats, but one;
And that it crowns!"

"To the memory of Isabel Blick, relict of William Blick, of Walcot, and daughter of the Rev. John Wightman, late rector of Desford, in this county.
She died 8th of June, 1783, aged 74."

"In memory of John Withers Bryan, who died August 5th, 1790, aged 42 years.
Reader!
the sigh which thou dost heave at the recollection of this Man, eloquently speaks his virtues,
and thy sensibility.
No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode;
There they alike in trembling hope repose,
The bosom of his Father and his God."

"To the memory of Robert Raven, who departed this life July 8, 1778, aged 32 years.
Long time afflicted sore I lay,
Under the hand of God;
Till he was pleased to take away,
The scourges of his rod.
Then cease, dear wife, to mourn for me,
Tho' human Nature's frail;
Dry up your tears, alas! for why?
They nothing can avail!
But place your trust in CHRIST on high,
On him alone depend;
For he'll the widow's wants supply,
And be the orphan's friend!"

"To the memory of Joseph Cave, who departed this life Feb. 27, 1782, aged 30 years.
Also Thomas, son of Joseph and Ruth Cave, he died October 27, 1781, aged 1 year.
Why do we mourn departing friends,
Or shrink at Death's alarms;
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends,
To call them to his arms.
Are we not trav'lling upwards too,
As fast as Time can move?
Nor would we wish the hours more slow,
To keep us from our love."

"Sacred to the memory of Mary, the wife of John Reynolds, who departed this life April 18, 1806, aged 47 years.
Inconstant earth! why do not mortals cease,
To build their hopes upon so short a lease!
Uncertain term! whose lease but just begun,
Tells never when it ends 'till it be done;
We doat upon thy smiles, not knowing why,
And while we but prepare to live, we die!
We spring like flow'rs, and for a day delight,
At morn we flourish, and we fade at night!"

In 1784, in digging a grave under the steeple, in the space between the nave and the chancel of this church, several scuttles-full of cattle-bones, horns, and jaw-bones of the herd, came to light, the teeth in many instances entire, five feet deep from the surface, and a foot deep in bones, with an appearance of a lateral continuation. Some months before, a few yards distant South of the above discovery, near the steeple or belfry door, were met with (in making a grave, within a foot of the surface, continuing on all sides, as well as through the cut, and not terminating with it) a vast quantity of very large pebbles, wedged or heaped together, without interstices of earth or mortar. Foundations, well set in mortar, have likewise sometimes occurred to the present sexton, within the precincts of this church. About a quarter of a mile on the West of this church, at the place called "Holy Bones," a few yards from St. Nicholas's church easterly, many like bones of victims have at times been discovered [2].

[1] Written by Mr. Charles Rozzel, a schoolmaster in Leicester; whose epitaph is given in p. 320. Fenton was killed in his own house by François Soulés, a French teacher. The jury, by the direction of the judge, returned a special verdict, grounded on the plea that he went to the house in search of his property (a pistol which Fenton had taken from him). This plea was not allowed by the twelve judges; but Soulés afterwards received his Majesty's pardon. See Gent. Mag. vol. XLVIII. p. 47.

[2] "The above inscription gave considerable offence, as it was considered as reflecting on the court before which Soulés was arraigned; and the Spiritual Court ordered the stone to be removed; but this order was never executed." J. S. H.

"Joseph and Sarah Horton.
Joseph Horton, died 25th Feb. 1769, aged 50.
Sarah died 19th March, 1763, aged 52 years.
Death can't disjoin, whom Christ hath join'd in love,

In Heaven's a happier place, frail things disguise;
Live well, a gem in future Life the prize."

In the chancel at Measham, near Ashby-de-la-Zouch:

"Here lieth the body of William Hill, of Measham, in the county of Derby, gent. who departed this life in the 66th year of his age, A. D. 1692. He left one daughter, Elizabeth, who married Robert Phillips, of Newton-in-the-Thistles, in the county of Warwick, esq. He also left two sons, Richard and William. Richard married Mary, the eldest daughter of the Rev. Mr. Alfounder, rector of Thurcaston, in the county of Leicester. The said Richard departed this life the first day of December, 1739, in the 59th year of his age; and his body lies interred in the chancel of the parish church of St. Martin, in the Borough of Leicester. He left one daughter and one son, to wit, Mary and Richard, now living in Leicester.

"Here also lieth the body of William Hill, the brother of the said Richard Hill, deceased, who departed this life the 16th day of September, 17... in the 67th year of his age."

Of the soldiers slain in the market-place at Leicester, 24 were buried under St. Martin's communion table. This appears (says Mr. Bickerstaffe) from an old book, near a foot long, and perhaps almost as thick, in the late vicar Mr. Gregory's possession, and containing some other memorabilia.

⁎ P. 568, line 4, for St. Michael's, read St. Martin's.

Since p. 596 was printed, I have met with a very old copy of the epitaph on Elizabeth Reynolds, wife of John Curzon, of [Crox]all, who died Aug. [23,] 1521, which is there said to be "in Reynolds' chapel," and bore these arms: Argent, a chevron Ermine between three cross crosslets Gules; fig. 40.

The same MS. preserves also, "from a gravestone in the Library," (probably the present Consistory Court):

"George Pilkinton, of Stanton,

P. 514. The house in the High Cross-street, lately in the possession of Mr. Stephens, containing the painted windows, which are peculiarly interesting to an Antiquary, being perfectly unique in their kind, has devolved by will, upon his youngest son, the Rev. Richard Stephens, M. A. and fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford.

The partiality which has, generally, been shewn by natives of the county of Leicester for the University of Cambridge, in preference to that of Oxford, has partly arisen from the proximity of the two counties of Leicester and Cambridge, and partly from the facility of conveyance from the one to the other; but more than all, from the ignorance of the greater advantages, which natives of this county enjoy in the University of Oxford, than they do in the sister University, where no benefits are peculiar to this county. Though the following list of benefactions embraces a wider field, than the map of the county of Leicester presents, they may not be the less acceptable; because, if they are not all peculiar to this county, they still may be within its reach.

Merton College.—There are twenty-four fellowships belonging to this college, to which those candidates are eligible who are born within the diocese in which the college possesses estates. The living of Kibworth Beauchamp, and other land in the county of Leicester, belonging to that society, the natives of that county are of course eligible to the fellowships of that college.

John Willyott, D. D. chancellor of Exeter, gave exhibitions in 1380, for the maintenance of twelve portionistæ, called postmasters, which are open to the University at large. John Chamber increased them to 14; but directed that his two additional exhibitioners should be elected from Eton College.

Exeter College.—Sir William Petre, in 1565, founded eight fellowships, to which those candidates are eligible who are born in those counties in which his heirs should have lands or possessions. So great a latitude being allowed for the eligibility of candidates, it is probable that some of the founder's descendants at least do possess lands in this county.

Oriel College.—William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1507, purchased lands for the maintenance of one fellow, successively to be chosen out of the diocese of Lincoln. The ten original fellowships of Adam de Brome appear to be open to the University in general.

Lincoln College.—Thomas Rotheram, Bishop of Lincoln, augmented the number of fellows to 12; and ordained that the rector and 12 fellows should, according to the place of their nativities, be thus ordered; viz. all to be born within the dioceses of Lincoln, York, and Wells, so that from the last there be but one. As for the 11 (from whom the rector is always to be elected), eight of them are to be of the diocese of Lincoln, and four of those eight to be of the county.

Thomas Hayne, of the parish of Christ-church in London, some time a student in this college, gave 12*l.* yearly, for the maintenance of two scholars, to be chosen by the mayor, recorder, and three senior aldermen of Leicester, from those descended of his father Robert Hayne, or his uncle John Musson, wherever educated. In defect of such, then they are to be chosen out of the freeschool at Leicester, or Melton in that county, &c. Given by will Sept. 28, 1640.

All Souls College.—Archbishop Chicheley, the founder of the college, created 40 fellowships for the natives of the counties within the province of Canterbury; but with this provision, that those of his alliance should be first regarded.

Brasenose College.—Edward Darby, Archdeacon of Stow, in the county of Lincoln, founded a fellowship for one born in the said archdeaconry; or in defect of one there, then from the county of Leicester; and if not there also, from the county of Northampton; and if there neither, from the county of Oxford; or, in defect of such person, one born in the diocese of Lincoln.

Settled 29th May, 1537.

It was covenanted by indenture, bearing date July 3, 1522, between the College, John Port, serjeant at law, and John Hales, esq. one of Williamson's executors, that, with the sum of 200*l.* paid by Hales, lands should be purchased of the annual value of 9*l.* for the maintenance of two scholars or fellows, born in the city, or in the county palatine of Chester, of the name, cousenage, or lineage of John Williamson or John Port. The family of Miles, of St. Martin's, Leicester, and the family of Fenwicke, of Hallaton, in this county, can trace their pedigree to the founders of these two fellowships.

William Hulme, in 1691, gave lands in trust to certain persons mentioned in his will, and their successors, for the maintenance of four exhibitioners, for the space of four years, to commence from the time of taking the degree of B. A. with preference to the natives of Lancashire; but in defect of such to any county. They are to be nominated by the warden of Manchester, the rector of Prestwich, and the rector of Bury, for the time being. These exhibitions have been augmented to the number of 15, at the value of 100*l.* and 10*l.* for books per ann. each.

Trinity College.—Sir Thomas Pope, in 1554, founded 12 fellowships and 12 scholarships, for the benefit of the natives of his manors. In defect of such, the scholars who succeed to the fellowships are to be chosen from any county in England, with the limitation that no more than two persons of the same county be admitted fellows at the same time. N. B. It seldom happens that there is any claimant from the manors of the founder.

Wadham College.—In Wadham College there are 15 fellows and 15 scholars. The scholars from the fellows to be chosen are to be three of the county of Somerset, three of Essex, and the rest of any other county of Great Britain.

Worcester College.—George Clark, D. C. L. endowed six fellowships and three scholarships. The scholars are to be born of English parents, within the provinces of Canterbury and York[2].

[1] John Lettice, D. D. late fellow of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge; vicar of Peesmarsh, in the county of Sussex; prebendary of the cathedral of Chichester; and chaplain to the present marquis of Douglass (the son of this clergyman), informs me, that his father, who was of Sidney Sussex College, did not proceed farther than to the degree of B. A. The Graduate-book of the University of Camhridge also bears the same evidence. R. S.

ST. NICHOLAS.

ST. NICHOLAS.

This church has little to boast of in respect of architecture: its walls are immoderately thick, the pillars and arches that support the roof are heavy, and consequently an impediment to the preacher.

The tower and the South-west entrance of the church bear very evident marks of the remains of very early Saxon architecture, almost bordering upon the Norman æra. See Plate XLV.

The steeple, being in a very dilapidated state, was taken down about ten years ago; and the poverty of the parish (with the consent of the Bishop) has not suffered it to be rebuilt[1].

The bells are the oldest in Leicester. The inscriptions are,

1st bell, " Goldfield. Nazarenus Rex 1656."

2d, " Henry Smith, Richard Hunt, churchwardens, 1710. God save his church."

3d, " Sonus iſte 1617. Celorum Chriſte[2]."

Mr. Samuel Carte noticed in the Archiepiscopal Register at Lambeth an article relative to the taking away one of the bells from St. Nicholas's church in 1321, and the date of the cross the same year; with a memorandum of a distant cross[3].

There is in this church a modern raised font.

The chancel is used as a vestry; and a chapel at the East end of the South aile is now the site of the altar.

There were formerly three ailes; but about the year 1697, that towards the North was taken down in consequence of its ruinous state.

In 1650, the only return made was, "the same man that hath St. Martin's."

The parish is small[4], and formerly unable to maintain a preacher; for which reason it was usually held by the vicar of St. Martin's; but of late years, by the beneficence of Queen Anne, the liberality of the Corporation, and the contribution of the parishioners, it is regularly provided with a separate vicar.

Much praise is due to the present vicar, the Rev. John Anderson, for having secured, by a fence, the holy and consecrated ground of this church-yard from a nuisance, offensive both to feeling and decorum. It used to be the resort of idle boys, who amused themselves with defacing the sepulchral stones, and committing other depredations.

[1] See some memoirs of Mr. Angel in the Town History, pp. 502 and 512.—Mr. Throsby mentions having seen an account of an annual gift of 5*l.* to the preacher of this church, left by will, and gives also the following quotation from the Parish Books: "Memorandum—It was agreed upon the 17th day of July, in the yeare of our Lord 1664, betweene Mr. Bonde, minister of St. Maryes, in the borough of Leicester, and the parishioners of St. Nicholas parish, in the same borough, that the said Mr. Bond shall come once every fortnight, on the Sabbath day, and read divine service, according to the Canons of the Church of England; and that the said Mr. Bond, either by himselfe or sufficient preacher, preach one sermon every month in the yeare, in the parish church of St. Nicholas." Beside this, he was conditioned to administer the sacrament, and do all other duties of a parish minister; for which he was to have all the tithes and dues which were usually paid to their late vicar, Mr. John Angel.

[2] Rector also of Eastwell, Twyford, and Hungarton; and chaplain to the earl of Derby. He died in 1757. Abigail his wife died Jan. 14, 1774, aged 66.

[3] "He was a gentleman much esteemed as a Divine and a Scholar. Under his tuition the free-school was a seminary of great repute; not only the sons of the first families, in these parts, were placed under his care, but numbers from much greater distances also received the rudiments of an education that does honour to his abilities. Dr. Farmer, not to mention many more of literary fame, was his scholar. Chearful in his deportment, and destitute of tyranny, his school was a scene of lively obedience. Beloved by the boys for his free and gentle treatment, his precepts were readily received, and the task dispatched with alacrity. As a divine, he alike captivated in the desk and pulpit. He read with an energy just and influencing; taught with a conciseness pertinently persuasive, and intelligible to a general auditory, and was long considered as one of the brightest ornaments of the clerical profession." J. T.—See memoirs of him p. 512; his epitaph, p. 610; and for the pedigree of his family, vol III. p. 456.

[4] He was elected head master of the Free school April 29, 1762. See p. 512, of the Town History. Mr. William Davenport, the eldest son of this gentleman, was a very excellent scholar; and, having had the good fortune to be noticed by Dr. Johnson, was, by his recommendation, apprenticed to William Strahan, esq. his Majesty's Printer; and, for his knowledge in Greek and Latin, obtained, for a short time before his death, an annuity of 30*l.* bequeathed by my late worthy friend and partner, Mr. Bowyer, for the purpose of encouraging the study of the learned languages among the succeeding race of Printers. This young man died Jan. 2, 1792.

[5] Vicar of Great Wigston, see p. 320.—At the time he was about to resign the small vicarage of St. Nicholas, my poor friend the Reverend William Bickerstaffe (of whom see p. 320) cast many "a longing look" at the old church; and some of the characteristic Letters he then wrote shall be here given:

"To the Right Honourable Edward Lord Thurlow, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

"My Lord, Leicester, August 10, 1786.

"By the advice of Mr. Macnamara, a Representative of Leicester, I am instructed to appeal to your Lordship's humanity, to grant me a gracious hearing, by a private address. At fifty-eight years of age, permit a poor Curate, unsupported by private property, to detain your attention a few moments. From 1750 I have been Usher at the Free Grammar school here, with an appointment of 19*l.* 16*s.* a year; seven years Curate of St. Mary's, my native parish, in this Borough; then six years Curate at St. Martin's with All Saints, lately bestowed by your Lordship on Mr. Gregory of this place; and now an opportunity occurs to your Lordship, to give me an occasion to pray for my Benefactor, and those that are dear to him, during my life. 'Tis this; a dispensation is expected every day, by the Head Master of the School where I serve, the Rev. Mr. Pigott, Vicar of Great Wigston in this county, to connect a fresh acquisition in Lincolnshire with it; and he urges your Lordship's Petitioner to try for the living of St. Nicholas here, which he must relinquish. It is simply 35*l.* a year; but, as this Corporation grants an annual aid to each living in Leicester, of 10*l.* a year, St. Nicholas, joined to my School, might render me comfortable for life, and prevent the uncertainty of a Curacy, and the hard necessity, at any time of life, of being harassed, in all weathers, by a distant cure. My Lord, if this freedom is disgusting, impute it to the sympathising heart of the generous Macnamara, who prompted me to it in these words, speaking of your Lordship: 'Indeed, I feel too forcibly my obligations to press further, or trespass more at present upon his Lordship; but, as you are a native of Leicester, and a freeman, I conceive it my duty to hint to you, that an application immediately from yourself, stating your situation exactly, as you have done to me, may have the desired effect, as his Lordship's great abilities can only be equalled by his humanity and benevolence.' May the all-mighty, all-present, and all-merciful God direct your Lordship, on this and all occasions, to do His pleasure; and protect you from all dangers, which may threaten soul, body, or estate; is the hearty prayer of "Your Lordship's humble suppliant, WM. BICKERSTAFFE."

"For the Rev. Dr. Farmer, Master of Emanuel College, Cambridge.

"I think, if Dr. Farmer would undertake my cause, through means usually at hand with men of eminence, I might, by Divine Providence, find the Lord Chancellor disposed to serve me. This living is so immediately tenable with my school, and compatible with an additional curacy, such as Ayleston, which I have, that I cannot forbear troubling your Reverence to take up arms in my cause, and declare, 'Old neighbour, old playfellow, inveniam viam, aut faciam.'—My school is but 19*l.* 16*s.* a year. I have no other certain tenure at present. I served Mr. Simmonds seven years at St. Mary's, and Mr. Haines six at St. Martin's with All Saints. These have vanished with their Vicars; and if I had not Ayleston, I might be harassed with a distant cure, to the discomfort of my life, and the prejudice of my health, at a time when more ease and leisure seem necessary.—I presume Mr. Secretary Pitt, the Representative of Cambridge University, and even the Chancellor of the same, with a crowd of other great personages, have eyes, ears, and hearts, at the service of its late Vice-chancellor, and yet Master of Emanuel."—To another friend Mr. Bickerstaffe writes, "At 58 years of age, having more inclination to a church-living than a wife, I applied to my old neighbour and playfellow, Dr. Farmer, to procure me St. Nicholas parish here; and my application was so well-timed, as to get the business into the hands of Mr. Pitt, their University-representative, by the kind service of the Vice-chancellor, who at the same time attended to commit to him the University-address to the King. Dr. Farmer informed me, that this Chancellor was his particular friend; and that, if St. Nicholas's was pre-engaged, I was put in the way of church-preferment. The living is yet undisposed of; the Lord Chancellor is, or lately was, at Buxton; and I remain uninformed of any thing further: there is no room to expect a smile of favour till the gout is more civil! It seems like a Chancery-suit. The present Chancellor is said to be a leisurely gentleman in these matters. He keeps livings in suspense. This may be designed to accumulate an aid, to pay for the seals and the induction.—Swift says, 'Lord Treasurer, for once be quick!' Should you tell the Chancellor, 'it would suit him, and that I say it,' it might cost me the loss of his slow favours. At my age, I could tell him, with strict propriety, Bis dat, qui citò."

Letters to the same purport were addressed to Mr. Macnamara and Mr. Hungerford. To the latter he says, "Mr. Keck and yourself solicited lord Denbigh in my behalf for St. Mary's; and I hope I have not forfeited your favour since."

Round the ledge of another old stone:
"..... Bakeden ..... anno ....."

On the West side of the pulpit:
"Thomas Rickards, died March 9, 1804, aged 39 years.
Here also lieth Mary Ayscough, who died Sept. 30th, 1805, in the 80th year of her age."

On flat stones in the North aile:
"Here lies the body of William Deane, gent.
heretofore mayor of this Corporation.
He departed this life Sept. 4, 1693, aged 70.
And here also lieth the body of Grace his second wife,
who departed this life Aug. 29, 1713, aged 80."

"Here lieth the body of Susannah Deane, widow, relict of Jane Deane, clerk. She was daughter of sir John Harpur, of Cawke, in the county of Derby, bart. She departed this life Sept.
20, 1706, in the 53d year of her age.
In the same grave, or near it, lie the body of two of his children,
James and Dorothea.
He died Nov. 28, 1685, aged about 6 years;
and she died March 22, 1696, aged 19 years."
In piam gratamque parentum memoriam
hunc posuit lapidem Gulielmus Deane, utriusque Offordi rectoris, com. Hants, 1716."

"Here lieth the body of Captain Thomas Mawson, who served King Charles I. of blessed memory, and also his sacred majesty Charles II.
He departed this life the 11 April, 1678, aged 64."

Near the altar:
"Here was interred the body of Gerrard Andrewes, clerk, M. A. late vicar of this parish, and many years master of the free-school.
He departed this life
the 29th day of February, 1764,
in the 60th year of his age."

"Near this place lies his mother
Mrs. Frances Andrewes.
She died in May 1751, aged 82;
and his sister,
Mrs. Elizabeth Fenn, died the 4th day of February, 1760,
aged 65 years.
On his left hand lie the remains of his daughter Isabella.
She departed this life
the 28th day of January, 1760,
in the 9th year of her age;
and of his son,
Francis-Henry Andrewes,
who died Sept. 20, 1756,
in the 5th year of his age.
Beneath is interred the body of Mrs. Isabella Andrewes, relict of the late
Rev. Gerrard Andrewes.
She died March 10, 1788,
in the 70th year of her age."

In the vestry:
"Here lie interred the remains of Anne Clayton, daughter of the Rev. John Clayton, once vicar of this perish.
She died March 14, 1784,
in the 63d year of her age."

"Beneath this stone
are deposited the remains of John Freestone Wilson (formerly of Doughty-street, London), who departed this life at Leicester, 16th May, 1810, aged 32, and to whose memory this stone is placed here by his afflicted and disconsolate father."

"Here lies the body of William Sutton, who departed this life June 13, 1736,
in the 45th year of his age."

In the North aile:
"Here lies the body of Joseph Newton, sen.
one of the aldermen of this Borough.
He departed this life Dec. 31, 1759, in the 78th year of his age.
He was a worthy, pious, and honest man."

On a neat monument:
"In memory of Mary Slack, daughter of James and Lucy Slack,
who died Feb. 1, 1794, aged 14 years.
Sleep on, thou fair, and wait Th' Almighty's will;
Then rise unchang'd and be an Angel still."

In the church-yard:

Rev. William Clayton, rector of Ravenstone, in the county of Derby, and vicar of Anstey near Coventry, in the county of Warwick, died April 27, 1799, aged 75.

"Here are deposited the remains of Hamlett Clarke[1],

Abstract

Abstract of the late Mr. Alderman Gabriel Newton's[1] Trust Deed for establishing Schools[2].

15 March, 1760. By indenture of bargain and sale of this date, inrolled in the Court of Chancery, and made between Gabriel Newton, of the Borough of Leicester, gent. (one of the aldermen of the said Borough) of the one part; and Nicholas Throsby, Esq. mayor of the borough of Leicester, and the bailiffs and burgesses of the said borough, of the other part; reciting, that it had pleased God to endow the said Gabriel Newton with a plentiful fortune, but to take away his only son, whereby he was left childless; and therefore the said Gabriel Newton being desirous of settling great part of his substance to charitable uses, and having it much at heart to establish such a charity as might be most conducive to the general good of mankind; from a long series of reflection and observation of life, the said Gabriel Newton had sufficient reason to conclude that a religious education of children would, of all others, be the most extensive branch of charity, as its salutary effects might possibly operate in some degree to the latest posterity; for, if children whose parents were not able to bear the expence of putting them to school, and either totally negligent or not capable of instructing them at home, were, by the beneficence of others, taught to read and write, and therewith, for a series of years, obliged daily and duly to attend and join in the service of the Church, might it not reasonably be hoped that they were in the most likely way to receive such impressions of religion as might some time work together for their future happiness, as well as be a means to improve their condition in this present life, and that such children so educated (with the assistance of God's grace), becoming men of truly virtuous and Christian lives, might possibly, by their shining example in the deportment of themselves and the prudent government and pious instruction of their families, so effectually implant amongst their children, servants, and neighbours, such principles of religion and virtue as might happily derive to future generations inestimable blessings:

And also reciting, that the said Gabriel Newton was desirous of promoting the due reading of the Creed of St. Athanasius, as thereinafter mentioned, which he looked upon as the completest body of Divinity ever composed since the time of the Apostles, and a full answer to all heretical objections to the doctrine and tenets of the Church of England; concurring with Dr. Waterland in his History of that Creed, who deemed the minister or parishioners of any place, who did not receive and read the same as directed by the rubrick of the Church of England, to be lukewarm Christians:

It is witnessed, that the said Gabriel Newton to the intent to carry his said design in execution, and to the intent to settle and assure the messuages, cottages, closes, lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments thereinafter mentioned, to the several uses, intents, and purposes thereinafter expressed and declared of and concerning the same; and, in consideration of five shillings to him paid by the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, did grant, bargain, sell, alien and confirm unto the said Nicholas Throsby, the said mayor, and the said bailiffs and burgesses, their successors and assigns,

Certain estates at Barwell, Earl Shilton, Bushby, and Stretton, all in the county of Leicester; to hold unto the said Nicholas Throsby the said mayor, and the said bailiffs and burgesses, their successors and assigns for the time being for ever, to the only proper use and behoof of the said Nicholas Throsby the said mayor, and the said bailiffs and burgesses, their successors and assigns for the time being for ever, upon the several trusts, intents, and purposes, and subject to the several provisoes or conditions thereinafter expressed; to wit:

Upon trust, that the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, their successors and assigns for the time being[2], should, by and out of the rents, issues, and profits of the said granted premises, after deduction of all necessary outgoings thereout, for taxes, repairs, quit-rents, or otherwise, yearly for ever pay, or cause to be paid, unto the several mayors, or chief officers, bailiffs, and burgesses, of the several boroughs or corporations, their successors or assigns for the time being, after mentioned, and to the several resident ministers, whether rector, vicar, or curate, churchwardens and overseers of the poor, of the several parishes and hamlets after mentioned, the several yearly sums of money after expressed; viz.

[1] "Gabriel Newton was the son of reputable parents in Leicester, where, by marriage chiefly, he procured a considerable fortune. He was bred to the combing line; and afterwards was master of a capital inn, the Horse and Trumpet, near the High Cross, which he quitted, and lived afterwards in the line and character of a gentleman. He had three wives, but only one child, a son, who lived nearly to the age of manhood; after whose death, he turned his thoughts to the laudable purpose of being serviceable to posterity. His projects, in the way of charity, were many; and his opponents, who were always ready to thwart his schemes, not a few. His temper might not be even at the decline of life; but those who had neither abilities nor inclination to do good might have humoured his inclination without the least injury to themselves. He once offered to re-build the South front of St. Martin's Church, if the Churchwardens would indulge him with a sitting in it, to his mind, for the charity boys. He likewise offered to re-build the Old Hospital, if the Corporation would consent to his boys occupying a certain place on the Town's premises; and many other praise-worthy schemes he would have executed, had he not been opposed by those in power. He was chosen Mayor in 1732. He was a regular attendant on divine service, daily; and was at times rude to the Clergyman if he ever omitted the performance of the Church-service, particularly the Athanasian Creed on the days appointed for it to be read: even the ringing of the prayer-bell he attended to with critical exactness: Mr. Philip Hackett, the then parish clerk, and he, fought once in the belfry, about Mr. Hackett's boy being irregular in ringing the bell. He broke his cane over the clerk's head, for which the clerk kicked him down the stairs. If he ever found a man indelicately turned against the church wall, he was sure to receive a blow from the Alderman's cane." Throsby's Leicester, p. 188.

[2] "Leicester, March 23, 1808. The Corporation of Leicester, having now the satisfaction to find themselves sanctioned by the opinion of Counsel, in extending the Charities of the late Mr. Alderman Newton, hereby give notice, that they are about to appropriate to the establishment of Schools in Leicester, and some other Towns in Leicestershire, the large accumulation of rents, which have been invested in the funds, pending the repeated litigations of the heir at law, and subsequently, till Time has barred his claim. For the School at Leicester there is wanted a master, well qualified to teach reading, writing, and arithmetic. There will be a considerable number of boys under his tuition, inclusive of those now in the School which was established out of the personal estate of Alderman Newton, the present master of which is about to retire. Any person who can produce satisfactory testimonials of his abilities, and habits of teaching, as well as of his moral and religious character, may leave written applications at the Town Clerk's Office. None need apply who does not answer this description, as a liberal salary will be given to secure a master well qualified for the situation.—Sanctioned also in carrying into execution the ulterior trusts reposed in them by the Alderman's will, the Corporation give notice, that they are about to appropriate the surplus rents of his estates, and of the accumulation thereof arising from the investments made pending the litigation of the heir at law, and subsequently, till Time has at length barred his claims, in apprenticing poor boys of the Town of Leicester. The trust-deeds define the objects of this charity to be, 'Poor boys of indigent and necessitous parents of the Established Church of England, and inhabitants of the Town of Leicester, not receiving relief from the poor rates. Persons answering the above description may apply at the offices of Thomas Wrighte, esq. Mayor; or Mr. William Heyrick, Town-clerk." Copied from a Public Advertisement in the Leicester Journal.

To be by the said several mayors, or other chief officers, bailiffs, and burgesses of the said boroughs or corporations last mentioned, respectively for the time being, and by the said ministers, churchwardens, and overseers of the poor of the said parishes and hamlets of Ashby de la Zouch, St. Neot's, Barwell, and Earl Shilton, respectively, applied, disposed of, and appropriated, towards the clothing, schooling, and educating of 25 boys, of indigent or necessitous parents of the Established Church of England, in each of the said towns, parishes, and hamlets respectively, without any regard to particular parishes in the said boroughs or corporations, where there are more parishes than one, all the parishes in such borough or corporation, respectively, being to receive the benefit thereof as if only one parish; as should, by such mayors, or other chief officer, bailiffs, and burgesses, and such minister, churchwarden, and overseers of the poor respectively, be deemed proper objects of such charity (save and except in the said parish of Barwell, and in the said hamlet of Earl Shilton, in which places there were to be but 20 boys only), under the restrictions and regulations after mentioned: viz.

The boys to be taken and chosen from the age of seven years inclusive, to the age of 14 years inclusive; (to wit,) none under the age of seven years, nor above the age of fourteen years; each boy to be allowed annually, or once in 15 months, or once in 18 months, as the said last-mentioned trustees shall think proper, a green cloth coat, waistcoat, and breeches, not under 20*d.* per yard, one shirt of flaxen cloth, not under 13*d.* per yard, and such stockings and caps, and other apparel, to be bought out of each of the said several annual sums, as the said Gabriel Newton had usually allowed for some time past, in some or one of the said towns, boroughs, parishes, or hamlets; and the residue then remaining out of each annual sum to be yearly paid to a proper master, to be chosen as after mentioned, to teach and instruct such a number of boys as before mentioned, in each of the said boroughs, towns, parishes, and hamlets respectively, reading, writing, and arithmetic, and singing of Psalms, and toning the responses in and during divine service, in the several parish churches and chapels in the said boroughs, towns, parishes, and hamlets, respectively, where only one parish church or chapel; and, where there are more than one, in such parish church or chapel as the said trustees for the application of the said annual sums respectively, for the time being, should think proper; such master and boys, in each borough, town, parish, or hamlet, respectively, to be nominated and chosen by the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses for the time being in each borough or corporation, respectively, assembled at their common hall there, or the major part of the same body then present; and by the resident minister, whether rector, vicar, or curate, churchwardens, and overseers of the poor in such parishes or hamlets respectively, or the major part of them; in which election, the mayor, or other chief officer, in each corporation, respectively, for the time being, and the resident minister as aforesaid, in each parish and hamlet, respectively, to have the casting vote, when the electors were equally divided (subject nevertheless to such inspection, visitation, and regulation, as after mentioned). Provided always, and it was the true intent and meaning of the said Gabriel Newton, and of those presents, that no boy or boys should be admitted to receive the benefit of the above donation, if the parent or parents of such boy or boys for the time being should receive any collection or benefit from the levies raised in such town, borough, parish, or hamlet, respectively, for the maintenance of the poor there. Provided also, and it was the true intent and meaning of the said Gabriel Newton, and of those presents, and the said Gabriel Newton did thereby declare, that no town, or parish, hamlet, or place, should receive any benefit from the said donations, where the said creed of St. Athanasius used in the Rubrick of the Church of England, was not publicly read, in the church, chapel, or place used for divine service, in such town, parish, hamlet, or place, on the days appointed in the said Rubrick for that purpose; and where the boys should not be permitted to tone the responses in divine service, as before directed:

Provided further, that if the rector, vicar, or curate, of any town, parish, hamlet, or place, that for the time being should happen to enjoy the benefit of the said donation, should, at any time thenafter, neglect or refuse to read the said Creed of St. Athanasius in divine service, as directed by the said Rubrick of the Church of England; or if the said boys should not be permitted to tone the responses in divine service as before directed; that then, and in either of the said cases, and when and as often as it should so happen, it should and might be lawful to and for the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, for the time being, assembled at their common hall in the same borough, or the major part of the members of the same body then present, to take away the benefit of the said donation from such nonconforming town, parish, hamlet, or place; and pay and apply the money usually paid to such town, parish, hamlet, or place, to and for the benefit of the like number of boys in any other town, parish, hamlet, or place, in the same County that the said nonconforming place or places should or might be situate, or in any other town, parish, hamlet, or place, not then enjoying the benefit thereof, for the time being, in the manner, and under the same regulations and restrictions, as aforesaid, as the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, for the time being, assembled at their common hall as aforesaid, or the major part of the same body then present, shall think fit (save, except, and unless the said Creed should at any time thereafter, by King, Queen, or Parliament, be abrogated or abolished out of, and not used in, the Rubrick of the Church of England, which abolition, in the opinion of the said Gabriel Newton, would be a greater blow to the Church and State than taking off the head of the Royal Martyr King Charles the First, that then the omitting reading the said Creed as aforesaid should not be deemed a forfeiture of the said donation.) Which said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, for the time being, assembled at their common hall in manner aforesaid, were thereby appointed the proper judges, to determine whether the said Creed should be, or for the time being had been properly, read or not read, or whether the said toning of the responses had or had not been used, so as to entitle any town, parish, hamlet, or place, to enjoy or subject them to be deprived of the benefit of the said donation, according to the true intent and meaning of those presents. Provided also, and it was the true intent and meaning of those presents, and the said Gabriel Newton did thereby impower the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, and their successors for the time being, or the major part of them, assembled at their common hall, from time to time, and when and as often as they should think fit, to elect and appoint one or more person or persons, as steward, treasurer, or secretary, to the said charity, to receive the rents of the said granted premises, and do all other matters relative thereto, and to keep the accompts of the fund thereby created for carrying on and supporting the said charity, and to receive and pay the several appointments thereof; and also, by such steward, treasurer, or secretary, or otherwise, when and as often as the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, assembled as aforesaid, should think fit, to visit the several towns, parishes, hamlets, and places, that should for the time being receive the benefit of the said donation, and inspect into the accompts of the several trustees thereby appointed for the disposition thereof, and to regulate the application of the same, according to the true intent and meaning of the said indenture; and also to pay and allow unto such stewards, treasurers, or secretaries, out of the said fund, his or their necessary charges and expences, and all other charges and expences attending such visitation; and such yearly stipend or salary for his or their trouble as they the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, assembled as aforesaid, should think proper; such steward rendering an accompt to them when and as often as they should think proper; with power for the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, assembled as aforesaid, such stewards, treasurers, or secretaries, to remove, and other or others in his or their stead to appoint, when and as often as they, or the major part of them, assembled as aforesaid, shall see occasion. Provided further, and it was the true intent and meaning of the said Gabriel Newton, and of the said indenture, that in case the funds thereby created for the establishing, and supporting the said charities for the time being, should not be sufficient, after deduction of all necessary outgoings as aforesaid, to pay to the several towns, parishes, hamlets, and places before mentioned, the several annual sums before expressed; that then it should and might be lawful to and for the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, for the time being, assembled as aforesaid, or the major part of the same body then present, from time to time, and at any time thereafter, to lessen the number of such towns, parishes, hamlets, or places, as they should think fit; and, so, on the contrary, if the same funds for the time being, by any improvement thereof, should happen to be more than sufficient for the purposes aforesaid, it should be lawful for them, the same mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses assembled as aforesaid, to increase the number of towns, parishes, hamlets, and places, and add such as they should think proper, in the same manner, for the like purposes, under and subject to the like restrictions and regulations as before directed, so as the said charity or donation of the said Gabriel Newton might be as extensive as possible.

Provided always, and it was the true intent and meaning of the said Gabriel Newton, and of the said indenture, that it should be lawful for the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them assembled as aforesaid, from time to time thereafter, and when and as often as they should think fit, to remove the said charity or donation from any town, parish, hamlet, or place, that should for the time being receive the benefit thereof, where the same should be abused, or the regulations before directed not be complied with, according to the true intent and meaning of the said indenture; or for any other just and reasonable cause; and pay, apply, and dispose of the same, to and for the benefit of any other town, parish, hamlet, or place, as they the said mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, assembled as aforesaid, should think proper[1].

[1] In consequence of the increased funds of this charity, the following correspondence took place on the establishment of one of these Schools in the County.

" To the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council of the Borough of Leicester. January 1, 1809.

" We the minister, churchwarden, and principal inhabitants of the parish of Hinckley,—desirous of establishing a free-school under the will of the late Alderman Gabriel Newton,—Petition and solicit you to grant us such a pecuniary aid and assistance from the fund given by the said Gabriel Newton, for the furtherance of cloathing and educating of the industrious poor children, as you in your discretion may think fit. Signed, H. E. HOLLAND, Minister; JOHN WARD, THOMAS SANSOME, Churchwardens; &c. &c."

" GENTLEMEN, [" To the Minister and Churchwardens of Hinckley.] " Leicester, January 24, 1809.

" The Corporation of Leicester are possessed of certain estates in Leicestershire, under a deed of trust made by Mr. Gabriel Newton, formerly an alderman of Leicester, for the purpose of paying certain annual sums, specified in the deed, to several towns therein mentioned, towards cloathing and educating a certain number of children at each of those places; with a provision that, in case the rents should at any time become more than adequate to the support of the schools at such places, this Corporation, as his trustees, should have power to extend the charity to other towns. It is with great satisfaction that the Corporation (after many years of tedious litigation with the Alderman's heir at law) find themselves enabled to perform the gratifying part of their duty. The increase of the rents, added to the dividends arising from the sums which accumulated during the time the suits with the heir at law were pending, and which were invested from time to time, and now remain in the funds, will afford the means of granting 26*l. per annum* to five places besides those specifically mentioned in the trust deed, and besides a sum which they have appropriated to a school at Leicester. Under these circumstances, and having reason to believe that the town of Hinckley is one in which the donation may be made very useful, I am directed to acquaint you, that they intend to grant 26*l. per annum* to that parish, commencing at Lady-day next, provided the conditions mentioned in the trust-deed be complied with, and that the minister and principal inhabitants will use their best endeavours to procure voluntary contributions in aid of it. The trustees are not authorized to give a larger sum. As it is not sufficient of itself to establish a school upon the plan settled by the donor, they think it right to require an assurance that exertions will be made by the parishioners, so as to render it as beneficial as possible; and they doubt not but that you and the more opulent inhabitants of your town will gladly promote an object so desirable. The principal conditions which the donor himself has annexed to the gift are the following: It is to be applied " towards the cloathing, schooling, and educating of 25 boys of indigent or necessitous parents of the Established Church of England in each town, between the ages of seven and 14 years; each boy to be allowed, annually, or once in 15 months, or once in 18 months (as the trustees may think proper), a green cloth coat, waistcoat, and breeches, not under 20*d. per* yard, a flaxen shirt not under 13*d. per* yard, and such stockings, caps, and other apparel, as Mr. Newton in his life-time had usually allowed. To be taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, singing of psalms, and toning the responses in the parish church. No boy whose parents receive parochial relief is to be admitted; nor is any parish to have the donation where the Creed of Saint Athanasius shall not be read in the Church on the days appointed in the rubric." If the parishioners of Hinckley accept the donation upon the terms above stated, an abstract of the material parts of the trust-deed will be hereafter sent for their better guidance; and it now only remains for me to request the favour of a speedy answer, and which I shall take the earliest opportunity of laying before the Corporation. W. HEYRICK, Town-clerk."

" SIR, [" To William Heyrick, esq. Town-clerk.] " Hinckley, Aug. 29, 1809.

" A few days ago, at a meeting of the parishioners of this place, reference was had to a letter received from you so long since as January last, respecting the late Mr. Alderman Newton's charity. We are deputed by that meeting to notify to you, that the annuity of 26*l.* will be gladly accepted, and met with an adequate sum, to fulfil the intentions of the said charity. We are desired to give an assurance to that effect; also to ask you for any further necessary information on the subject.

" We are, Sir, your obedient servants, JOHN WARD, JOHN BLAKESLEY, Churchwardens."

" GENTLEMEN, [" To Messrs. Ward and Blakesley, Churchwardens, Hinckley.] " Leicester, July 7, 1810.

" Owing to the answers from several other parishes to which the Corporation, as Trustees of the late Mr. Alderman Newton's charities, had made offers for establishing schools, similar to that made to Hinckley, not having been received; the Committee, to whom the management of the affairs of those charities are confided, did not meet until the 3d instant, when I laid before them your letter of the 29th of August last, by which it appears that the parishioners of Hinckley are desirous of receiving the annuity of 26*l.* upon the terms mentioned in my letter of the 24th of January, 1809. At this meeting I received the directions of the Committee, to inform you, that I am ordered to pay the annuity to your parish from Lady-day last, in case the school is already established, or shall be established by Michaelmas next; and that, if it should not be established by that time, the payment shall commence from Lady-day next, if the school be then established. I inclose an abstract of the trust-deed [p. 611], which shews fully the conditions annexed by the donor to the grant, and which I need scarcely observe, the Corporation, as Trustees, are bound to see complied with. I am not aware that you will need any further information from me than my letter of the 24th of January and the trust-deed will afford; but if you do, I beg you will make no hesitation in applying to me for it. W. HEYRICK, Town-clerk.

September 22, 1810. Whereas the Town of Hinckley having obtained the late Mr. Alderman Newton's donation, " towards the cloathing, schooling, and educating of twenty-five boys, of indigent or necessitous parents, of the Established Church of England, between the ages of seven and fourteen years;" any person belonging to the said parish (not receiving parochial relief) who wished to have the benefit of the above charity, were requested to apply to the minister or churchwardens.—In course the establishment immediately took place; and 25 boys were cloathed at Hinckley in March 1811.

[1] Against the North wall of Woburn church, between the two windows, is an alabaster monument in two parts, whereon, kneeling before an altar tomb, is a knight in armour, and his lady. Behind him, four sons; and her, one daughter. Below, another man, in a gown, and his wife, with two sons and three daughters. On a square of black marble at top:

"HERE LYETH SIR FRANCIS STAUNTON, KNIGHT, WHO WAS HIGH SHERRIFE OF THIS COUNTY, AGED .., AND DYED ....., ALSO DAME ELIZAB. HIS WIFE, AGED 66, WHO DYED 1630.

The mother's dead; father and sons survive;
'Tis grace must make them, after death, alive.
What! though a golden name, in marble set,
Is that a new name on the white stone writt?
In that alone will comfort then be found,
When that God's angell the last trump shall sound."

[1] "The family of Dillingham appears to have been very numerous in the parish of Dean; but no record of his birth appears in the Register." Lysons's Bedfordshire, p. 73.

"Francis Dillingham, born at Dean, and bred Fellow in Christ College in Cambridge, was an excellent Linguist and Disputant. My Father was present in the Bachillor's Schools, when a Greek Act was kept, between him and William Alabaster, of Trinity College, to their mutual commendation: a disputation so famous that it served for an æra, or epoch, for the Scholars in that age, thence to date their seniority." Fuller's Worthies, Bedfordshire.

On a freestone on the chancel floor at Wilden:

"Qui doctus .... quoque vel ....
Vixit & ingenui, conditur hoc Tumulo.
Franciscus Dillingham, Rector hujus Ecclesiæ, quondam Socius Coll. Christi Cantab.; Academiæ Taxator; unus ex Translatoribus Sac. Bibl. Hebr.
& Oratoribus in Publicis Comitiis;
Gradu Baccalaureatûs. Obiit Feb. 24, an. D'ni 1625."

[2] Epitaphs in the church of Barnwell All Saints:

1. "Thomas Dillingham, A. M.
Rector of this church near 44 years;
died Sept. 23, anno Dom. 1702, ætat. suæ 72.
A good man, and faithful pastor of Christ's church."

2. "Here lyeth interred Mrs. Frances Dillingham, the widow of Mr. Thomas Dillingham, rector of this parish. She was buried July the 7th, 1716, in the 76th year of her age.
Many weeping eyes were at this grave, who had been cured by her care and skill."

3. "Sacred to the memory of Mr. Thomas Dillingham, A. M. and worthy rector of this parish;
an ingenious, learned, charitable, and pious man.
He was the son of an excellent and pious father,
William Dillingham, Doctor of Divinity,
Master of Emanuel College in Cambridge,
And Vice-chancellor of that University;
whose father was also a worthy man, and rector of this parish many years. He married Eliz. Pickering, daughter of Major Gilbert Pickering, grand-daughter of sir Gilbert Pickering, of Tichmarsh, bart. by whom he had issue
William, Elizabeth, and Ann Dillingham.
Anno Domini 1704, he died, much lamented, in the 46th yeare of his age;
and was buried here, by his entirely affectionate and much afflicted widow, who erects this small monument to his honoured memory."

[3] The following epitaph is at Over Dean:

"B. M. S.
Johannis & Gratiæ Dillingham, parentum:
Johannis etiam & Oliveri filiorum.
Johannes pater, honestâ familiâ in hâc villâ oriundus,

In cujus gratitudinem hoc erexit memoriale."

[4] One of these ladies married a Mr. King, whose son (Thomas King, esq.) was living in 1797.

[5] The Masters of Emanuel College and Clare Hall had each of them Verses in the Gratulatory Poems of 1660.

In St. Edmund's church, Cambridge:

"Hic jacet Theophilus Dillingham, filius Thomæ, natus Over Deane, in com. Bedfordiæ, ejusdemque Archidiaconus, & Præfectus Aulæ de Clare; denatus Cantabrigiæ Nov. 22, 1678, annoque ætatis suæ 76. Hic jacet etiam Thomas Dillingham, A. M. filius natu maximus prædicti Theophili & Elizabethæ suæ uxoris, ejusdem Collegii Socius; natus fuit Hadham Magnâ, in com. Hartfordiæ; ob. 19° Decembris, anno Domini 1722, ætatis suæ 60."

"Aug. 4, 1660. Dr. Thomas Paske, who had been elected master of Clare Hall in 1610, being ejected in 1640, was succeeded by Dr. Ralph Cudworth, and he by Dr. Theophilus Dillingham in 1654; who having married a daughter of the said Dr. Paske, the Doctor being very old, quitted his right of restitution to his said son in law, who accordingly was re-admitted 1660."—"Jan. 26, 1661. Theophilus Dillingham, D. D. was collated to the prebend of Ulfskelf, in the church of York, void by the resignation of Thomas Paske, D. D. He was master of Clare Hall, Cambridge; installed Archdeacon of Bedford, Sept. 3, 1667; and died in 1678. Dr. Dillingham had married the daughter of Dr. Paske; and, by his double resignation, came now to the prebend of York and the mastership of Clare Hall, having been in possession of that headship from 1654, and now, by Paske's resignation, and the fellows' reelection, was re-admitted in 1660." [1] "I have found no less than eleven coats of arms belonging to the different families of Noble, six of which are evidently only different bearings derived from one, i. e. those of Devonshire dispersed into other Counties. The Nobles of Leicestershire have a very different coat; it is, Quarterly, 1st, Argent, on a chief Gules a lion passant Or, for Noble; 2d, Barry, nebulé, Argent and Gules, on a canton a crescent Or; Kebell, or Keeble; 3d, Argent, on a bend Sable, five bezants; Palmer; 4th, Gules, a chevron Ermine, between three eagles displayed Or; Eaton. For a crest, an eagle displayed proper. Plate XLV. fig. 15.

"The Nobles of Leicestershire have been a numerous and genteel family for some centuries. The Baronetage, under the article Cave, says, that a Noble, of Stowford in Leicestershire, married the daughter of Christopher Cave, esq. who died in 1495, the ancestor of the baronets of that surname. Mr. Lodge, Somerset Herald, remarks, that the account in the Baronetage of the Caves is long, but very inaccurate. I suppose it is erroneous in this instance, because Stowford is not in Leicestershire, but in the county of Devon. Is it not, therefore, very probable, that one of the Nobles, having married a lady in Leicestershire, who was an heiress, went into that county, and settled there. Though the arms are very different, yet I have no doubt that the Nobles of Leicestershire descend from a cadet of those of Devon, long before the present distinctions of houses were invented, when we know that different branches of the same family took different bearings.

"Though not allied to the Nobles of Leicestershire, yet my father Mr. William-Heatly Noble was intimately acquainted with the late Mr. George Noble, of Swansea; and I have corresponded with his brother the last Christopher Noble, esq. From him and Mr. Heyrick, of Leicester, two very judicious gentlemen, I received much information relative to the last descents in this pedigree.—The direct line is now extinct in the name from want of heirs male; but in Leicestershire there are various families, as branches of these Nobles of Reresby. One of these, I suppose, was the very respectable and Rev. Thomas Noble, incumbent of Wolvey in Warwickshire. He kept for some years an academy at Leicester Grange; and died at Hinckley March 10, 1784. M. N."

[2] His first wife (whom he married in 1590, and who was living in 1616) was Mary, another of the daughters of Robert Heyrick, esq. (See their Pedigree, vol. III. p. 220.)

[3] Probably Henry, the first rector of Frolesworth of this family, who was born in 1652.

[4] Mr. Francis Noble was a woollen-draper by trade. He had a niece, who married a Mr. Watson, whom she survived. J. S. H.

[5] This Susanna died about the year 1671. One of her sisters (I do not know which) married a Mr. Watts, by whom she had a daughter, named Elizabeth. J. S. H.

PEDIGREE of NOBLE, of FROLESWORTH. (See p. 616.)

Rev. Henry Noble, of Emanuel College, Cambridge; B. A. 1676; rector of Frolesworth 1679; M. A. 1681; purchased the advowson 1700 (George Noble and Joseph Noble, gents. trustees[1]); died 1722, æt. 70. = Margaret ......; bur. Sept. 24, 1717.

Jane, bapt. Jan. 11, 1681.

Richard Noble[2], bapt. Jan. 10, 1686.

Rev. Anthony Noble, of St. John's College, Cambridge; rector of Frolesworth 1723; died Dec. 1, 1738, æt. 51. = Dorothea Smith; buried May 18, 1796.

Mary, bapt. April 13, 1691.

Henry Noble, bapt. Sept. 28, 1698; buried March 8, 1718.

Rev. Henry-Lovell Noble[3], of St. John's College, Cambridge; M. A. 1764; rector of Frolesworth the same year; died Nov. 8, 1788, æt. 51. = Jane Newbold, died March 4, 1807.

Rev. Samuel-George Noble, educated at the Charter-house; of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge; B. A. 1789; rector of Frolesworth 1790; married Oct. 6, 1794; living 1810. = Margaret, daughter of Thos. Lambert, esq. of Malton, co. York.

Elizabeth-Newbold Noble; married 1784; living 1811. = Rev. William Babington, rector of Cossington 1787; living 1811. [See vol. III. p. 965.]

Jane-Maria, born April 4, 1771; buried Nov. 9, 1792.

1. Samuel-Lambert Noble, born Aug. 26, 1795.

2. Henry-Thomas Noble, born Oct. 15, 1796.

3. George Noble, born Dec. 13, 1799.

4. Charles-William Noble, born Aug. 12, 1803.

5. Edmund-Newbold Noble, born Oct. 15, 1805; died Apr. 21, 1806.

6. Sidney Noble, born Nov. 4, 1806; died Dec. 4, 1806.

1. Margaretta, born Sept. 11, 1796.

2. Maria, born Sept. 27, 1800.

3. Rebecca-Jane, bo. Nov. 12, 1801.

4. Eliz.-Berdmore, born Aug. 4, 1804.

5. Isabella-Frances, born Nov. 21, 1807.

[1] The names of Joseph (who died Feb. 15, 1711, æt. 47; and Anne his wife died Dec. 12, 1755, æt. 94; see vol. II. p. 385.) and George Noble occur among the benefactors at Waltham.—George Noble, of Waltham (probably brother to Henry, rector of Thurleston in 1679), died March 19, 1725, æt. 66; and Mary his wife, died May 5, 1713, æt. 51.—Their son, George Noble (one of that happy class of beings whom Charles the Second used to talk of, viz. between a Justice of Peace and Chief Constable) died Feb. 2, 1777, æt. 77; and left his property to Joseph Noble, esq. of Melton, woollen-draper and banker, who died Nov. 6, 1792, aged 68, and gave a handsome legacy to the present rector of Frolesworth. He was buried at Melton (see vol. II. p. 254).

[2] There was one Richard Noble, a clergyman, who lived at Stoke, in the county of Northampton. I am not certain of the abovementioned Richard being the one to whom I refer; but I have reason to believe that this Clergyman was related (at least intimately connected) with the above family. J. S. H.

ROMAN ANTIQUITIES.

Nearly adjoining to the Church of St. Nicholas is a famous remnant of Roman Antiquity, the JEWRY WALL; which has been very copiously described in the former Part of this Volume, pp. 7, & seqq. where three different Views of it are given; one of which shews its relative situation to the Church of St. Nicholas, evidently built in great measure from Roman bricks, which had previously formed a part of the Jewry Wall. Another small View of the Wall is here given in Plate XLV. In pages 9—12, will also be found a particular description of the several Mosaic pavements and other remnants of Roman grandeur. Several other discoveries have since been made; of which the late Mr. Throsby, who was resident on the spot, very diligently marked the progress.

In 1788, on digging a well near St. Nicholas's Church, was found among the rubbish, at the depth of 24 feet[4], one of the finest copper coin[5] ever discovered in Leicester; which is now in the collection of Mr. Fowke, of Elmesthorpe, near Hinckley. Obverse, a fine bust of the Emperor; round his head,

"MAXIMIANVS . NOB . C. S."

Reverse, a figure representing DEUS GENIUS, standing before a lighted altar[6]. Round it,

"GENIO . POPVLI . ROMANI . I . C."

Four other Coins, found still more recently, are here given in Plate XLV.; namely,

Fig. 17. a coin of Nero, found in Belgrave Gate. This coin, in a perfect state, reads as follows:

Obverse, round his laureated head,

"NERO . CAESAR . AVG . P . MAX . TR . P. P. P.;" i. e. P*ontifex* MAX*imus* TR*ibunitiæ* PO*testatis* P*ater* P*atriæ*.

Reverse, "GENIO . AVGVSTI . S. C." The Genius is represented standing before an altar; in its right hand a patera, in its left a cornucopiæ[7].

Fig. 18. is a coin of Hadrian, but in a lamentably defective state[8], found in High-street, in digging for the foundation of the King's Arms Inn. A perfect copy of this coin, engraved by Gesner, has on the Obverse, "HADRIANVS . AVG . COS . III . P . P."

Reverse, "FORTVNAE . REDVCI . S . C.;" struck, it seems, on his safe return to Rome, from one or other of his visits to the remoter provinces of the empire.

Fig. 19. was found near the West Bridge:

Obverse, "DIVA . FAVSTINA."

Reverse, "AVGVSTA...... S . C."

Faustina Senior, represented on this very perfect coin, holds in her right hand a Palladium or Victoriola, and in her left a Hasta prora, "S. C." Senatus Consultu[9].

---

[4] Five feet lower was found the plain Roman pavement described in p. 12.

[5] This coin has been engraved in a former part of this Volume, Plate III.

[6] See Occo & Mediob. Numism. Imp. Rom. fol. Mediol. A. D. 1683, p. 90.

[7] Occo & Mediob. ubi supra.—There is a fine engraving of a very similar coin of Nero in Musel's Numismata, tom. II. among his engravings of the coins of Nero, No. 5. It reads on the obverse, NERO . CLAVD . CAESAR . AVG . GER . P . MAX . T . R . P . IMP . P . P. And on the reverse, GENIO . AVGVSTI . S . C.

[8] "This may be one of the many common coins struck in honour of that emperor, to commemorate his coming [ADVENT] into some or other of the departments or provinces, or countries in subjection to the Roman empire, at his time very many. The coins of this class are very numerous, and generally exhibit on their obverses this emperor's head, sometimes laureated; at other times not, with the simple inscription, HADRIANVS . AVG. to which is added, not unfrequently, COS . III . P . P. i. e. CONSUL tertium, a third time, and Pater Patriæ, Father of his Country. On the reverses of them, two figures at full-length joining hands, very often an altar between them, and the appearance of a sacrifice, in solemnization of his advent, and the usual legend ADVENTVS . AVG . with S . C. Most frequently the Emperor's advent to the honoured country or province of his empire is particularly specified on these coins thus: ADVENTVS . AVG . HISPANIAE . GALLIAE . BYTHINIAE . ITALIAE . IVDAEAE . AFRICAE . MAVRITANIAE . &c. with or without an altar between the two upright full-length figures. There is a little variation on some of these advent coins of Hadrian, it being sometimes ADVENTVS, in the nominative, and at others in the dative, ADVENTVI . AVG . ARABIAE . SICILIAE . MACEDONIAE . &c. with and without the S . C . or the altar between the two figures joining hands.—The state of the above coin of Hadrian is so deplorable that it may be described as one of his advent coins to any of all the countries above-mentioned, or any other Roman province; on which there was not originally either an altar or the letters S . C . of which I cannot perceive the smallest vestige. The curious may be referred to the "Numismata of J. J. Gesner," a standard, scarce, and valuable work, rarely to be seen entire, in folio, Tigari, 1738, and to his coins of Hadrian. For my own opinion is, that the coin, fig. 18, is finely and more correctly engraven, in the "Numismata Antiqua à Jacobo Musellio collecta & edita Veronæ, 1702," in three volumes in folio, tom. II. among his coins of Hadrian, tab. LXXII. No. 2. To enable your readers to judge for themselves, I shall transcribe the legend on his engraving. Obverse, around Hadrian's head, HADRIANVS . AVG . COS . III . P . P.; and on the reverse, FELICITAS . AVG., The figure standing upright, joining hands with the other, which I take for that of the emperor, in his other hand, drooping down, holds a caduceus that reaches above his shoulder, of which there seems to be in the engraving (fig. 18) something that may be conceived to be a vestige of the remains of the caduceus." I owe this explanation to my good friend the Rev. Dr. Calder.

[9] Of this coin of Faustina Senior there is a fine engraving in Musel ut supra. See also, Numism. Imp. Rom. ut supra, Occ. Mediob.

Fig. 20. is a Colonial coin of Philippus Senior; and the true reading on the Obverse is as follows:

"ΑΥΤΟΚ . ΚΜΑ . ΙΟΥΑ . ΦΙΛΙΠΠΟϹ . ϹΕΒ."

Reverse, "ΑΝΤΙΟΧΕΩΝ . ΜΗΤΡ . ΚΟΛΩΝ ."

On the head, the usual symbol of Antioch, are the Greek letters Δ and E, and the Latin letters s and c. Musel's Latin description is, Imperator Caesar Marcus Julius Philippus Augustus. Antiochensium Metropolis Colonia Caput velatum et turritum in vertice Aries[1]. The Greek letters on the Reverse, with the head of Antioch as usually represented on its coins, Δ E, denote the words Δημαρχικης Εξουσιας Tribunitiæ potestatis, i. e. Tribunitial Power, and the Roman letters s. c. Senatus Consultu, which I think the Colony of Antioch only was permitted to put on their money.

The principal Collector of Roman Coins at Leicester in the middle of the Eighteenth Century was Mr. Thomas Lee, a silversmith, who died in 1776, æt. 76. He had made a large collection of coins; and had, through life, made Antiquity his chief study. He mingled but little with the world, and cared as little about its concerns. He was extremely shy, and particularly modest. He would neither hear nor utter an expression of levity; notwithstanding he was agreeably familiar with his acquaintance. His memory was retentive even on the verge of the grave. His peculiarities, which were the effect of shyness, were of that kind which rather called forth the smile of pleasure than the frown of disgust. After his death, the greater part of his collection (amongst which were some early Saxon coins) was sold by auction in London. Some of them, however, came into the possession of Mr. George Buckley, of Thornton; out of which Mr. Throsby selected a sufficient number to form a Plate in his "History of Leicester." Mr. John Coltman[2] also, at a period somewhat later, made a large and valuable collection of Roman coins; from which Mr. Throsby gave a second Plate[3]. To the labours of Mr. Throsby, I am principally indebted for the following particulars:

"In February 1793, as some workmen were employed in removing the earth from a piece of ground nearly an equal distance between the Jewry Wall and the River, they discovered, at the depth of about five feet, some very large blocks of free-stone, half a ton weight; which being removed, it was discovered that they had been placed over a kind of tunnel, two feet over and four deep, made of the same kind of materials and built on the same principles as the Wall. The bottom of this tunnel is of freestone, like the blocks which cover it. The commencement of it (so far as is known) is in a cellar of Mr. S. Roberts's house, near the South end of the Wall; and continues, with a considerable descent, in a right line, North-westwardly to the river.

"In emptying this tunnel of its contents (for it was completely glutted up) I found that it contained light earthy particles on the surface, somewhat heavier lower, at the bottom gravelly, the whole blended with broken pottery, in general of a singular construction; besides which, a few bones of animals were found therein, in a petrifying state, and a fragment or two of glass vessels; the bottom of one of which was layered with silver. Hence it seems apparent that this subterraneous passage was originally the Cloaca, or common Sewer, of the Roman town." [See the form of it in Plate XLVI. fig. 1.]

"Among the fragments of pottery which I selected from this store-house of antiquarian treasure, I was agreeably surprized to find some Roman characters impressed in relievo very legible. [In the mass which is grouped in Fig. 2. these characters are given to shew the size of the labels, and the formation of the letters.] In one or two instances, however, the contrary is the case, to me at least: these I will first notice. On the rim of a portion of a vessel made of white clay are several characters, doubly impressed, with a rude instrument. This fragment is represented with a label (marked Fig. a. 2). I need not observe that the letters C O are legible enough; the others call for investigation. The vessel originally was made shallow: its circumference, near the rim, about 27 inches, the breadth of the rim, which forms a half circle, two inches; it is layered within with a kind of grit, or small pebble, and bears the marks of fire. Might not this vessel be a censer used in sacrifice, called by the Romans Thuribulum? The other illegible characters (marked Fig. b.) are on the bottom of a vessel made of beautiful red clay. I guess that these all remain but one: they are copied in Fig. c.

"The legible characters are impressed chiefly on the bottoms of vessels of red clay, fashioned like a wine glass which is narrow at the bottom and broad at top. These were probably cups used in libations, with emperors' or consuls' names impressed thereon. One has MACRINI, probably the emperor Opillius Macrinus, who reigned 218 years after Christ. Another has ALBINVS; the third ALBVSA. Part of a bottom has only the ending of a name, TOR or IOR. If TOR, it might stand for, or rather be the ending of, CLAVD. FVSCVS SALINATOR, who flourished after Christ's nativity 118 years. The O and R are very plain. If IOR, there can be no ascertaining for whom it stood, as it doubtless, in that case, stands part of the word IUNIOR of which there were Emperors and Consuls many between the years 319 and 541. A part of two other impressions, found near, but without the sewer, bear these characters respectively, CICVR and MARΓNH on a sort of composition stone.

"Partly adjoining it, and nearly of a level with the covering stones, was discovered a floor of extraordinary formation: it consisted of mortar, small pebbles, and pounded brick or tile, of each about an equal portion. I have preserved a piece of it, as a singular curiosity: it shews strongly the simplicity and art-

[2] "By the death of Mr. Coltman, which happened Feb. 15, 1808, in his 81st year, the Town of Leicester lost one of its principal literary ornaments, and society was deprived of a most valuable member, whether we consider him as a scholar of profound learning, as an Antiquary of considerable research, or as a man and a Christian, distinguished by his simplicity, his candour, his humanity, his love of truth, and his attachment to the genuine principles of civil and religious freedom. Nature had cast him in no ordinary mould, and given him no common talents. He was a striking instance of the elevation and triumph of native genius above the adventitious circumstances of fortune and of situation. Himself engaged in trade, and placed in a town more remarkable for its manufactures than for its learning, he might have trod the common path of thousands, who have lived, grown rich, and died, forgotten. Such men are necessary to maintain the state of the world; but of such men Mr. Coltman was not one. Not assimilating with the maxims or the spirit of trade, he neither followed the one, nor imbibed the other. Hence, when his Warehouse required his presence, he was more frequently to be found in his Study, raised above this world by a contemplation of the Works of Nature and of Providence, or by a perusal of the writings of the Poets and Orators of Greece and Rome. Absorbed in speculations and disquisitions, which, whilst they exercised all the high powers of his mind, afforded to him a pure and unmixed delight, his spirit could not stoop to the petty cares, anxieties, and forms, of ordinary men. His circumstances were easy, and riches were never the objects of his desire. He was therefore but little known; and was generally looked upon as a man of an eccentric character, destitute of the knowledge of common life. But if to live be to exercise the faculties of thought and of reason, and to employ all the intellectual powers with which we are endowed, and not merely to eat and to drink and to labour, then indeed he knew how to live in a superior degree to most of his contemporaries; for few men were ever blessed with so clear a perception and so exquisite a relish of the sublime and beautiful, or with so much time and leisure to indulge his favourite taste to the latest period of a long life. The study of the antient Classicks, and of the Antiquities of his Country, were so much his favourite objects, as to justify a hope that he may have left behind him some writings on these subjects in a state to be given to the world. To those who knew him best, this slight tribute of respect from one who honoured him when living, and laments him now that he is no more, will not be unacceptable, and to those who knew him not, it will convey a faint sketch of one of the "most ingenious, unassuming, and amiable of mankind." Gent. Mag. vol. LXXVIII. p. 181.—To Mr. Coltman I was indebted for an original Heraldic MS. by Mr. Burton, as acknowledged in the Preface to Vol. I. p. viii.

lessness of the age when it was formed. Dare we say that this was a labour of the inhabitants of this Island prior to the invasion of the Romans?

"The copper coin shewn in Fig. d. was shoveled from the top of one of the covering stones of the sewer (Fig. e.), and was in high preservation. The legend of VRBS ROMA, and the galeated head of Rome on the Obverse, and the wolf, with the twins of Romulus and Remus on the Reverse, are commonly ascribed to Constantine the Great. The T. R. P. on the Exergue is the mint-mark, TR*everis* P*ercusse*. (Subauditur Moneta Trevas.)

Fig. f. on the same Plate was found, in August 1793, near the site of St. Peter's church, in the part below the Freeschool; and Mr. Throsby believed it to be the only gold coin ever found in Leicester. It was taken from the earth by a workman who was lowering the foot passage in the street; and was in the highest perfection; and is inscribed,

Obverse, "IMP*eratori* CAES*ari* NERV*æ* TRAIANO OPTIMO AVG*usto* GER*manico* DAC*ico*."

Reverse, "P*ontifici* M*aximo* TR*ibunitiæ* P*otestatis* COS. i. e. CONS*uli* VI. P*atri* P*atriæ* senatus P. Q. P*opulusque* R*omanus*."

Another coin, of inferior metal, nearly the size of the former, was found at the same time with the stones which have the inscriptions CICVR and MARΓNH; but Time had so defaced it, that the head was scarcely visible. On the reverse scarcely any thing was distinguishable, to make it differ, in appearance, from a lump of base metal injured by rust.

"To attempt a description of all the fragments of pottery would be vain; the variety is manifold both with respect to colour and formation. It is remarkable that none of the pieces, except one, are glazed, but those made of red clay: the exception is a small piece of thin black pottery delicately veined. When I compare this little beauty to many others which seem artless in their formation, their original use mysterious, and bearing about them no characteristic but clumsy strength; I am sometimes apt to conceive they, respectively, were in use at very distant periods. One piece of red clay has a rude representation of hunting: two figures appear in Roman military dresses; one pretty perfect.

"The glazed pottery has suffered nothing from time; many of the other it has much injured. Besides numbers of pieces which seemed formed for culinary purposes, there are a variety of different sized heads of vessels, of white clay, with thick short handles to the necks; on the whole not unlike the top of candlesticks.

"Figs. 4, 5, are singular pieces of pottery.

"Fig. 6, is the bone of an animal in a petrifying state.

"Figs. 7, 8, are representations of vessels, formed from fragments of pottery, to shew other original formations.—All these were found within the sewer.

"I shall now advert to other things, which form a part of this extraordinary discovery.

"Within the space of a yard of this antient sewer lay the base of two columns; and two shafts, each above a yard long, girth nearly a yard and three fourths; none of these lay below the blocks of stone which covered the shore. About the same time, but at the distance of thirty yards from these, was discovered, on a bed of fine red clay, at the depth of 12 feet, a capital of a column, made of the same sort of stone as the base and columns, and corresponding in every particular with them. I have put all the members of one column together in my garden. This, now it is erected, shews that it was originally hewn behind, to fit some rugged building, probably of Forest stone[1]. This column corresponds exactly with no order; it is of a purple hue. I observed that, in the centre of the shaft, where there had been originally a piece of square iron to hold the joints together, that which remained of the iron was reduced to a rusty scale or mould. Near these columns lay two amazing strong foundations of a considerable building, made of Forest stone and grout; the extraordinary floor mentioned above joined to one of them.

"The workmen of Mr. Thomas Lomas, of this place, having been employed in the April following, in removing a portion of the earth which was formerly the Grey-Friars (the burial-place of Richard III.) for the purpose of making some additional buildings to his house there; they found, at the depth of two yards, a fragment of a Roman pavement formed of a variety of coloured squares, very small, but destitute of design. This discovery was, almost immediately, succeeded by that of an extraordinary formed vessel of stone, shallow, but in other respects like an apothecary's common sized mortar. It had several projections without, seemingly for strength; within, its circumference about four feet. Near the pavement were found many pieces of pottery, and part of a Roman tile, ornamented with parallel lines at equal distances.

"These pieces of pottery correspond exactly, in every particular, with those found in the sewer; and one of them (Fig. 9.) deserves more than ordinary notice. It is a part of a large vessel of fine red clay, glazed, with a variety of devices and figures thereon, in relievo, on the outside; many of the ornaments agree exactly with the hunting piece noted above, but it is considerably larger. On one compartment is a figure like a mastiff dog, running; another represents a man in a Roman dress, in an attitude like dancing, with something like a snake in each hand, forming a half circle over his head with their tails; but these figures are so rude that I may be wrong in my conjecture. Under the man's feet is a hare hastily running. The next compartment, among other devices, shews a hound in full cry.

"One piece of pottery is exactly like that which I have already noticed as a censer, layered within with grit and small pebble. It is shewn in fig. 10. This, being a more perfect fragment, has a kind of outlet upon the rim, for pouring forth its contents, which rather staggers me in my opinion of these vessels. It is probable that they were pateræ, or goblets, used to catch the blood of the victim in sacrifice, which was afterwards poured upon the altar. This has two impressed inscriptions from the same instrument; and has, like the other, CO, very legible at the beginning, followed by an aukward formed M, and a C, or O. When the characters are decyphered, we, perhaps, may have a juster knowledge of their use.

"Fig. 11. appears to be the top of a sort of bottle, of white clay, of which many were found in the sewer.

"These things, there can be no doubt, are of the age of those found within the sewer. That with figures, taken as a picture, is of superior excellence.

"The Bone, fig. 12. was dug from a grave in St. Martin's church; it appears to have been the broken bone of some person never properly set, or set by some bungler in his profession; in either case Dame Nature seems to have performed wonders.

Fig. 13. is a small urn, and Fig. 14. a leaden coffin[2], found in 1783, in digging for gravel in Mr. Hardy's farm-yard in Humberstone Gate.

Fig. 15. was found subsequently near the same spot. This probably Roman brick is three inches thick, and was originally 16 inches long, but a part now is broken off.

Fig. 16. is a small urn, found in 1811, at Sproxton in this county, containing exactly 100 silver coins; which was presented, by the Rev. William Mounsey, vicar of Sproxton, to his Grace the Duke of Rutland[3].

⁂ In Plate XLVII. is given Mr. Throsby's View of St. Mary's Church at Leicester, as it appeared after the violent Storm of July 10, 1783.

[1] "Charnwood Forest, about nine miles from Leicester, presents some picturesque scenery of the rock which workmen say will not chisel into form. All the old foundations, so frequently discovered in Leicester, in the old part of the town, many of which take directions quite across the present streets, are made wholly of this durable rock."

[2] See Mr. Bickerstaffe's very accurate account of the contents of this Coffin in the former part of this Volume, p. 5*.—It appears that on the Coffin was placed a Bason, and round it six Urns, only one of which was perfect, nor was any thing within them.

Of the Origin, Progress, and Present State of the Manufacture of Frame-worked Stockings.

"The manufacture of Hose has been the chief mean of the prosperity of LEICESTER. It has diffused, with a bountiful hand, amongst its inhabitants, riches and population. In this branch of commerce Leicester has no competitor of consequence but NOTTINGHAM. These places together form one grand machine, whose movement, at this time (A. D. 1792) is smooth and rapid, furnishing employment for 20,000!—This astonishing statement will be easily credited when the various branches employed in the manufactory are enumerated, viz. hosiers, stocking-makers, woolcombers, dyers, framesmiths, comb-makers, winders, sizers, seamers, spinners, bobbiners, sinker-makers, stocking-needle makers, &c. &c.—In Leicester there are upwards of seventy manufacturers called Hosiers, who, it is computed, employ 3000 frames, i. e. including the wrought goods they individually purchase. Out of the 14,000 souls in Leicester[1], 6000, it is conjectured, are employed or depend on one branch or other of this great business.

"The Rev. Mr. Ross, of Leicester, gave the publick, through the channel of the Leicester Journal, about the year 1788 an account of the first stocking-maker in Leicester. He says, "In the year 1680, Alsop, a Northamptonshire man, came to Leicester, and resided in the parish of All-Saints, at or near the North-gate-way, where he followed the occupation of stocking-making, being the only person of that trade in Leicester. His first apprentice was Samuel Parker, and with Samuel Parker was Samuel Wright, a man well known here by many who are now living. The same Samuel Wright, in the latter period of his life, kept a potter's shop near the High-cross, and died in the year 1768. About 30 years prior to his death, Wright communicated the above account to a person who is at this time alive, resident in Leicester.

"The family of Poughfer, in Leicester, was one of the first that made any great progress in the stocking business. It was the practice of hosiers, on the first establishment of the business in this place, to send their hose for sale on a horse in panniers. So great was the dislike, or rather prejudice of the lower orders of the people to the hose wrought in a frame, on account of the knitters, that when the business was about to be established, we are told, that the frames were set up in cellars, from the streets, and other secret places, where they were worked by night as well as day; a frame, in consequence, served two men.

"Deering, whose History of the Town of Nottingham was published in 1751, says, after enumerating the towns where the stocking business flourished the most; 'of all these none comes in competition with Leicester for quantity of goods; but even this very town, though it may boast of its large concerns, yet must confess that its best goods are made at Nottingham.' At this time (1792) most of the silk and fine hose continue to be made at that place, and the more ordinary at Leicester[2]."

As Dr. Deering's account of the origin of this useful art is the most circumstantial that has yet appeared, I shall here transcribe it:

"The inventor of the stocking-frame was one Mr. William Lee, M. A. of St. John's College. in Cambridge, born at Woodborough, a village in Nottinghamshire, about seven miles from the town of Nottingham. He was heir to a pretty freehold estate; of whom the traditional story says: That he was deeply in love with a young townswoman of his, whom he courted for a wife; but she, whenever he went to visit her, seemed always more mindful of her knitting, than the addresses of her admirer; this slight created such an aversion in Mr. Lee, against knitting by hand, that he determined to contrive a machine, that should turn out work enough to render the common knitting a gainless employment: accordingly he set about it, and having an excellent mechanical head, he brought his design to bear in the year 1589; after he had worked a while, he taught his brother and several relations to work under him. Having for some years practised this his new art, at Calverton, a village about five miles from Nottingham; either himself or his brother James worked before queen Elizabeth, in order to shew an experiment of this kind of workmanship, offering at the same time this discovery of his to his countrymen, who instead of accepting the offer, despised him, and discouraged his invention: being thus discountenanced by his native country, and soon after invited over to France, with promise of great rewards, privileges, and honour, by king Henry IV. he embraced the seeming fair opportunity, and went himself, with nine workmen his servants, and as many frames, to the city of Roan, in Normandy; where they wrought with so great applause from the French, that in all likelihood the trade was to have been settled in that country for ever, had not the sudden murder of that monarch disappointed Mr. Lee of his expected grant of privilege, and the succeeding intestine troubles of that kingdom delayed his renewed suit, and at last frustrated all his hopes, at which, seized with grief, he ended his life at Paris. After his death, seven of his workmen (being left to shift for themselves) returned with their frames to England, two only remaining behind.

"These seven, with one Aston[3], who had been an apprentice to Mr. Lee, and by him was before left at home, and who also added something to his master's invention, did lay the foundation of this manufacture in England; and in the space of fifty years, this art was so improved, and the number of able workmen become so great; that the heads among them thought it necessary for the better regulating their members, and keeping this valuable business from spreading abroad, to petition Oliver Cromwell, to constitute them a body corporate, which however, for what reason I cannot tell, they did not obtain at that time. Their petition is wrote in the language of the time, but with so much strength, and giving so good an account of the usefulness and public advantage of this manufacture, that it deserves perpetuating, wherefore I have given it a place[4].

"King Charles II. after the Restoration granted them at last a charter[5]; by which their jurisdiction extended to ten miles round London.

"In process of time, when the trade spread farther into the country, they also in proportion stretched their authority and established commissioners in the several principal towns in the county where this trade was exercised; there they held courts, at which they obliged the country framework knitters to bind and make free, &c. whereby they (for many years) drew great sums of money, till some person, of more spirit than others, in Nottingham brought their authority in question; and a trial ensuing, the company was cast. Since that time the stocking manufacture has continued entirely open in the country.

[5] "The Fraternity of Stocking-weavers was incorporated by letters patent of the fifteenth of Charles the Second, 19 Aug. 1663, by the name of the Master, Wardens, Assistants, and Society of the Art and Mystery of Framework-knitters, in the Cities of London and Westminster, the Kingdom of England, and Dominion of Wales. This Company consists of a master, two wardens, eighteen assistants, and fifty-eight liverymen, whose fine for the livery is ten pounds. They have a small, but convenient hall, in Redcross-street, to dispatch their affairs in." Maitland's History of London, p. 1245.—Their arms are, a Stocking-frame proper. Motto, SPEED, STRENGTH, AND TRUTH, UNITED. See Plate XLV. fig. 16.

"Nor did these large sums do the company any service as a body; for, as they got the money illegally, so they spent it as lavishly, and instead of growing rich, the company became very poor; and many of their heads, having got a taste of high living and neglecting their business also dwindled to nothing. To which add, that within these thirty years last past [this was written in 1751] the merchants and hosiers in London, finding they could be fitted from the country with as good work at a cheaper rate than the London framework-knitters could afford; the bulk of that trade has since shifted from thence, and the chief dependance they had left was upon what is called Fashion work, it being for many years the mode to wear stockings of the same colour of the cloaths; and this also being by degrees left off, what remains now in London, does hardly deserve the name of trade.

"There are, besides the capital of England, ten towns in the country where this manufacture is carried on: viz. in Nottinghamshire, Nottingham and Mansfield; in Leicestershire, Leicester, Mount-Sorrel, Loughborough, Hinckley, and Ashby-de-la-Zouch; in Northamptonshire, Towcester; in Surrey, Godliman; in Derbyshire, Derby[1].

"Of all these none comes in competition with Leicester for quantity of goods; but even this very town, though it may boast of its large concerns, yet must confess, that its best goods are made at Nottingham, where by far the greatest part of the richest and most valuable commodity, whether of silk, cotton, thread, or worsted, is wrought; and it seems this so profitable employment, as it were by a magnetical force, is in the height of its improved state drawn towards the place of its birth, in order to make it ample amends for deserting it in its infancy[2]."

The principal trade of the town is that of making stockings, of which alderman Cowper, the chief manager of it in 1712, gave this account: That 20,000 todd of wool is wrought up yearly in the manufacture of hose, which employs in the town and country about 1,000 hands, to sort, comb, and dye; 6,000 to spin, double, and throw; 6,000 to weave, seam, and dress up; and that the improvement amounts to six times the value of the wool in the lowest sort of hose, and above that in the fine sort[3].

"A very lucrative branch of the frame business was established at Leicester by the late Mr. Whiteman, called Machine pieces; which displayed a wonderful variety of colours and forms. Some of his workmen, it is said, have earned on this fancy-work nearly 2l. 2s. per week, when the ordinary stocking-makers could scarcely gain, by hard labour, one fourth of the sum[4]."

"The manufactory of stockings in the Town and County of Leicester is the largest in the world; besides worsted wove hose, which are the staple article of the place, a great variety of cotton hose are now made, which from their cheapness obtain a sale in this and most other countries[5]."

A stocking-frame was introduced in Hinckley so early as 1640, by Mr. William Iliff; whose immediate descendant Mr. Joseph Iliff, after having carried on the manufacture there with much reputation for more than half a century, died universally respected, March 5, 1795, at the age of 76[6].

Of the same family (the son of Mr. Iliff's only sister) is John Green, esq. of Hinckley; than whom few men have carried on the profession with more ability, or with more success. He was also for some years a very diligent and active Captain of the Hinckley Volunteers; and is now (1811) Lieutenant-colonel of one of the four regiments of the Leicestershire Local Militia.

In 1778, the number of frames in Hinckley were 864; which furnished employment for 2585 persons; and from that period the increase has been very great; as that town stands, as taken in May 1811, agreeable to the act 51 George III. for taking an account of the population of Great Britain, 1126 houses, occupied by 1244 families, which contained 2872 males, 3186 females; total of inhabitants 6058. And at the same time 1550 stocking-frames were found at work in the parish of Hinckley.

[1] Mr. Hutton, the Historian of Derby, p. 190, speaking of the invention of the Stocking-frame, says, "The art was founded in revenge, and revenge in love. In process of time the machine found its way into Derby, and promised to become a staple trade; but the silk-mill being introduced, and the wages tempting, it was foretold, "that the hosiery would stagnate." The event verified the prediction; and frames are not more numerous than they were seventy years ago. There were (in 1791) about 150 in the place."

[2] "There are at this time (1751) in Nottingham fifty manufacturers, employers of frames, or as they are commonly called putters out, who all trade directly to London, besides those who can only deal with Leicester: both together occupy 3000 frames, of which upwards of 1200 are employed in Nottingham, and the rest in the villages about, who buy their provisions and other necessaries in this town: upon the just mentioned frames entirely depends, the masters, 3000 workmen, and a considerable number of winders, sizers and seamers; woolcombers, frame-smiths, setters up, sinkermakers, stocking-needle makers, not reckoning those trades who in part get their livelihood by this manufacture, as joyners, turners, &c, in the whole upwards of 4000." Deering, pp. 99—101. See also, in his Appendix, p. 364, a more particular description of the stocking-frame, with two copper-plates, and also one plate of the different constituent parts of this curious machine. See also Evelyn on Medals, p. 163.

Prefixed to a Poem published, by T. Baldwin, at Hinckley, 1776, and addressed, by Moses Ford, of that place, to the Gentlemen Hosiers, Frame-work-knitters, Framesmiths, &c. &c. of the several counties of Leicester, Nottingham, Derby, &c. on the rise, progress, and present state of the ingenious art of frame-work-knitting, is the following historical note: "The English and French have greatly contested the honour of the invention of the Stocking-frame; but whatever pretensions the French may claim to this invention, it was certainly invented by William Lee, of St. John's College, Cambridge, in the year 1589: but it does not appear that Mr. Lee ever received any hint, from any person whatever, relative to this great invention; but according to tradition, Mr. Lee paid his addresses to a young lady of great beauty and fortune, and one day he surprized her in a grove, knitting a fine silk stocking; and it was in this grove that the young lady gave Mr. Lee an absolute refusal of her hand, which so offended Mr. Lee, that he declared, he would invent a machine that should be a means of spoiling the knitters trade; so that it seems either love or revenge was the first moving cause to this great invention. However, soon after Mr. Lee had completed the stocking-frame, he petitioned Queen Elizabeth for her royal encouragement, but this petition was rejected; therefore, despairing of success in his own country, he went to France, and applied to Lewis the Thirteenth, for his royal encouragement and protection. Accordingly Mr. Lee continued at his court for some time, and the French King was so pleased with the ingenious art of frame-work-knitting, that he had a frame made of silver, for his own use, and he really learned the art of frame-work-knitting himself; and the said silver frame is kept in Paris, as one of the greatest curiosities in France. After the King had set the royal example, most of the French nobles learned it; but Lewis the Thirteenth, as a greater encouragement, issued out an order, that all persons that were willing to serve an apprenticeship to learn this art, should be allowed to wear a sword, which honour no other mechanic is permitted to do in France. In consequence of this order such numbers learnt it, that it is said there were several thousand of frame-work-knitters in Paris. Some few years after, Mr. Lee received an invitation to return to his native country, which he accepted; and soon after the art of frame-work-knitting became famous in England, and Charles the First, with a great many of his nobles, learned it; and it is said, that, as Mr. Lee had gained so much honour both at home and abroad by this invention, his former lover nobly gave him her hand, and crowned his wishes and ingenuity with her person."—I quote this paragraph as a matter of curiosity, without vouching for its historical exactness.

HONOUR OF LEICESTER.

THIS Honour appears to have been created by the following grant from king John, in the first year of his reign, to Robert (Fitzparnell) the fourth Norman earl of Leicester, who then enjoyed not only the antient possessions of the earldom derived from the earl of Mellent, but also the baronies of Hinckley and Groby, and other large possessions of his maternal ancestor Hugo de Grentesmainell:

"Johannes, Dei gratiâ, &c. Sciatis quod concedimus, volumus, & precipimus, quod Robertus comes Leicestrie & heredes sui post eum habeant & teneant, de nobis & heredibus nostris, omnes terras suas & feoda sua, cum omnibus libertatibus & liberis consuetudinibus suis, benè & in pacè, & honorificè, liberè, & quietè de sectis schirarum & hundredorum, & auxilio vicecomitum, sive capiatur' per hydatas terre, sive per carucatas, & de pecuniâ dandâ pro murdro & latrocinio, & de denario ad francumplegium pertinentibus; & preterea concedimus eis Tol & The'am, & Infengenthef, & Soch & Sach, & quietanciam de Dominicis suis per Dominica nostra de Pontagio, Passagio, Thelonio, Pedagio, Pa'agio, Stallagio, Tallagio, Geldis & Danegeld', Blodwite, Fithwite, Operationibus Castellorum, Murorum, Pontium, Parcorum, Fossatorum, Calcearum & Domorum; & quod habeant liberam Chaceam, &c. &c."

The abovenamed earl of Leicester died without issue, in the sixth year of king John, leaving his two sisters coheiresses to his great estates; viz. Amicia wife of Simon de Montfort, and Margaret wife of Saiher de Quincy, between whom the earl's estates were divided; and Simon de Montfort had a moiety of the Honour of Leicester, with the Barony of Hinckley, and was created earl of Leicester. The partition was thus confirmed by king John, in the eighth year of his reign.

"Johannes, &c. Sciatis nos concessisse & presenti cartâ confirmâsse partionem factam coram nobis & baronibus nostris per Simonem de Montforti comitem de Leycestrie, & Saiherum de Quenci comitem Wintonie, de omnibus terris & honoribus que fuerunt comitis Roberti Leycestrie die quo obiit, cum omnibus pertinentiis suis, ita scilicet quod tota medietas illarum terrarum & honorum in dominiis & feodis & omnibus aliis rebus & locis remanet uni illorum comitum, & altera medietas alteri. Salvis predicto comiti Simoni tertio denario comitatûs Leicestrie & senescalcia nostra, ita etiam quod xx librate terre de parte comitis Simonis remanebunt prefato comiti Saihero, preter partem suam quousque similiter deliberavit eidem comiti Saihero rationabilem partem suam de terrâ que fuit prenominati comitis Roberti in Normanniâ, &c."

Simon earl of Leicester left two sons, Simon and Almaric; the former was earl of Montfort in France, and resigned the title of Leicester, with its possessions, to his brother. The instrument of disclaimer is set forth in the Appendix to the First Part of this Volume, p. 41.

Simon, the younger son, who in consequence succeeded to the earldom of Leicester, was slain in the battle of Evesham (1265); and he was afterwards attainted, and his lands were seized.

King Henry the Third immediately gave the inheritance of the earldom of Leicester to his youngest son Edmund; and it afterwards became, and remains to this day, parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster. This grant is stated in the Appendix to this Volume, page 41, where many other grants and charters are set forth concerning the Honour of Leicester; and in page 48 of such Appendix, all the towns in the county of Leicester, which are within the Honour of Leicester, and jurisdiction of the Duchy of Lancaster, are enumerated.

At this day a Steward, and Bailiff for the Honour are appointed by the Duchy of Lancaster, as well as a Constable of the Castle of Leicester.

A Court of Pleas is held at the Castle, from three weeks to three weeks, before the Steward, who also holds views of frank-pledge at the Castle, and various other places within the Honour; and all replevins on distresses taken within the Honour are granted by the Steward instead of the Sheriff; also the execution of all process within the Honour of right belongs to the Bailiff of the Honour; but, for convenience, the Bailiff allows the Sheriff to enter the Honour on making a compensation for the profits.

The Mayor of Leicester is required by charter personally to appear in the Court of Pleas for the Honour on Monday next after St. Martin in the winter, and there take an oath "well and faithfully to observe and perform all and singular the ancient customs, jurisdictions, privileges, and pre-eminences, of the Duchy of Lancaster, within the Borough of Leicester, during his mayoralty."

The men and tenants of the said Honour have time immemorial been free, quit, and exempt from payment of toll for all their goods and things, in and throughout the realm of England, and had been so time immemorial. King Henry IV. granted his letters mandatory, under the Great Seal of England, at the town of Leicester, the 24th day of May, in the 4th year of his reign, in hæc verba:

"Henricus, Dei gratiâ, Rex Anglie & Francie & d'nus Hibernie, universis & singulis vicecomitibus, majoribus, ballivis, constabulariis, ministris, ac aliis fidelibus & subditis suis, tam infra libertates quam extra, ad quos presentes littere pervenerint, salutem. Cum, secundum consuetudinem in regno nostro Anglie hactenus optentum & approbatum, homines & tenentes Honoris de Leycestr', à tempore quo non extat memoria, quieti esse consueverint, a presentatione theolonei, pontagii, picagii, muragii, panagii, stallagii, passagii, lastagii, & cariagii, pro bonis & rebus suis, per totum regnum nostrum; vobis & cuilibet vestrum præcipimus, firmiter injungentes, quod omnes & singulos homines & tenentes Honoris predicti de hujusmodo theoloneo, pontagio, picagio, muragio, panagio, stallagio, passagio, lastagio, & cariagio, vobis seu alicui vestrûm, pro bonis & rebus suis, præstand' quietos esse permittatis juxta consuetudinem supradictam, & prout ipsi inde quieti esse debent, ipsique & antecessores homines & tenentes Honoris predicti à tempore predicto hactenùs rationabiliter quieti esse consueverunt. Test. meipso apud Villam Leycestrie, 24 die Maii, anno regni nostri quarto. Wymbysh."

King Edward VI. granted his letters mandatory, tested at Westminster, the 28th day of November, in the first year of his reign, in the same words as the former.

The men and tenants of the said honour of Leicester have accordingly all along used and enjoyed the aforesaid privileges and liberties of all places in England, without any hindrance or molestation, upon producing a certificate under the hand and seal of the Steward of the Honour, or his deputy, signifying that the bearer is a tenant or inhabitant within the Honour.

The antient form of certificate, which is still used, is as follows:

"To all and singular sheriffs, bailiffs, toll-gatherers, and other officers, ministers, and subjects of our sovereign lord the King, to whom in this case it shall appertain: Whereas, by divers of the King's majesty's most noble progenitors, kings and queens of the kingdom of England (amongst sundry other privileges, protections, and liberties, given, granted, and confirmed unto the Duchy of Lancaster), it is given, granted, and by acts of parliament confirmed, that as well the officers as the tenants inhabiting and resident of and in the said Duchy, and every of them, shall be freed, acquitted, and discharged, of and from all theolonage, pannage, pontage, passage, lastage, tollage, carriage, pessage, pickage, and terriage, for his and their goods, cattle, chattels, merchandize, and wares, by and through the whole realm of England, in all and singular markets, fairs, towns, and places, as well within liberties as without (except in towns and places being of the same Duchy); and that neither they nor any of them, nor their or any of their goods, cattle, chattels, factors, or servants, shall be distrained, exacted, molested, or impeached in the premises by any person or persons whomsoever (except as before excepted), upon pain to forfeit to our said sovereign lord the King, his heirs and successors, the sum of one hundred pounds, and to the parties aggrieved their damages besides; Now know ye, that I, Thomas Pares the younger, esquire, Steward of the Honour of Leicester, parcel of the said Duchy, do hereby certify, that A. B. the bearer hereof, is one of his Majesty's tenants, and inhabits and resides at S. in the county of Leicester, within the said Honour, parcel of the said Duchy, and is therefore intitled to the privileges, protections, and liberties aforesaid. Given under my hand and seal, &c."

The like priority and exemption is enjoyed by the burgesses of the Borough of Leicester, which is parcel of the Honour, on producing a certificate under the hand and seal of the Mayor.

The form of the certificate, as granted by the corporation of Leicester to a burgess in the mayoralty of Edmund Cradock, 1657, is this:

"To all Christian people to whom this present writinge shall come. The maior, bailiffs, and burgesses, of the burrough of Leicester, in the county of Leicester, send greetinge in our Lord God everlastinge. Know yee, that whereas, as well by letters pattents of Kinge John, sometimes Kinge of England, &c. bearinge date the sixe and twentyeth day of December, in the first yeare of his raigne; as also by divers other graunts, statutes, and acts of parliament, of Edward the Third, Henry the Fourth, Henry the Fifth, Henry the Sixth, Edward the Fourth, Henry the Seaventh, sometymes also kings of England; and also by divers other graunts, confirmations, statutes, and concessions, of Henry the Eighth, Edward the Sixth, also sometymes late kings of England, and of the lady Elizabeth, sometymes queene of England, and of the late King James; it is graunted, enacted, appoynted, established, and confirmed, that all and singuler tenents of the Honour of Leicester, holden of the Dutchy of Lancaster, and more especially the maior and burgesses of the burrough of Leicester, shall have, enjoy, and use (amongst other things) their liberties, priviledges, and immunities following, that is to say, that they shall be quitt of all and all manner of toles, pannages, passages, lastages, stallages, pessages, pitchages, terrages, murages, carriages, and stannages, whatsoever, in and thorough the realme of England, as well by sea as by land, for all their goods and merchandizes whatsoever, without any molestation, as by the said letters pattents, graunts, statutes, and confirmations, remayninge upon record, more at large it doth appeare. And because many from tyme to tyme (as it is said) doe clayme the said liberties, priviledges, and immunities aforesaid, which are not of the company of burgesses of the borough of Leicester aforesaid, nor ought to be quitt from such toles and payments: Know yee therefore now moreover, that wee the said maior, bayliffes, and burgesses, to you and every of you, by tenor of theis presents, doe certifye that William Newton, vintner, is one of the burgesses of the burrough of Leicester aforesaid, and that the said privileges and immunities, by force of the said graunts and confirmations, freely and quietly hee ought to haue and enjoy; wee therefore again instantly by theis presents doe desire and require that the said William Newton, and every other burgesse of the said burrough of Leicester, freely and quietly you will suffer to goe and returne with their goods and merchandizes whatsoever, without any of your letts or molestations, or without takinge or clayminge of them, or any of them, any tole, pannage, passage, lastage, stallage, pessage, pitchage, terrage, murage, carriage, and stanage, contrary to the liberties and immunities aforesaid, and for you and every of your more full satisfaction herein, that the said William Newton is one of the burgesses of the said burrough of Leicester as aforesaid, wee make you theis and our letters testimoniall; and for the better strengtheninge and confirminge thereof, wee have hereunto put our common seale of the burrough of Leicester aforesaid, dated at the Guildhall of the said burrough of Leicester, the tenth day of March, in the year of our Lord, one thousand sixe hundred fifty and seaven.

Abel Coles, common clerk here.
Edm. Cradock, maior."

In the 11th year of queen Anne a cause was tried between George Bent, gent. (one of the men of Leicester) plaintiff, and Thomas Gisbourne, esq. mayor of Derby, and Isaac Barker, his toll-gatherer, defendants, in an action of trover, for one heifer taken by defendants at Derby for non-payment of toll; which cause, by consent of all parties, was tried at Nottingham, and the plaintiff succeeded therein; but the action being in trover, the point then in question does not appear.

In another cause, tried in 1743, between Thomas Ayre the younger, plaintiff, and John Hornbuckle, esq. mayor of Bedford, and John Marchant his toll-gatherer, defendants, the following arguments were urged in the plaintiff's brief:

Mr. Ayre the plaintiff lives at Leicester, and is, and for several years past hath been, a very considerable grazier, and a freeman of the town of Leicester, and as such entitled to the aforesaid liberties and privileges; and it being necessary for him to take his cattle to divers fairs and markets in order to sell them; therefore, that they might pass and re-pass unmolested upon account of toll, he obtained a certificate, dated the 25th of March, 1737, under the hand of William Brushfield, then mayor of Leicester, and under the common seal of the said town of Leicester, signifying that he the said Mr. Ayre was a freeman of Leicester, and as such was entitled to the aforesaid liberties and privileges; and Mr. Ayre hath, subsequent to such certificate, taken his cattle to a great many fairs and markets, which have always been permitted to pass and re-pass toll-free, without any hindrance or molestation whatsoever, upon producing the said certificate, until the instance now in question.

Mr. Ayre the plaintiff sent a drove of cattle to a fair held at Bedford the 8th of December, 1743; and having about ten or twelve of them undisposed of, thought proper to send them to Newport Pagnell in the county of Bucks; and it being necessary for them to pass over the bridge over the river Ouze at Bedford, in their road to Newport aforesaid, that they might pass over the bridge unmolested, delivered his certificate to defendant Hornbuckle, then mayor of the town of Bedford, for his perusal and satisfaction that he the said Mr. Ayre was entitled to the said liberties and privileges; but Hornbuckle, after he had kept the certificate some time for his perusal, returned it, with answer that he should order the cattle to be stopped upon refusal of payment of toll for them; and on the next day, being the 9th of December, as plaintiff's servant was driving the cattle over the said bridge, defendant Marchant stopped them, and would not permit them to pass over without toll paid for them, although the plaintiff's said certificate was then produced to him; but, after some dispute, let them all pass except the two steers in question, which he still stopped for the toll of the whole drove; and after some more time spent in disputing about the toll, the residue of the drove being gone over the bridge along the road, plaintiff's servant was obliged to leave the said two steers to the pleasure of Marchant, and in his custody upon or near to the said bridge, in order to follow and take care of the others which were gone along the road. That Marchant, after having kept the said two steers for about an hour upon or near to the said bridge, impounded them; therefore plaintiff brought this action to obtain a satisfaction for his damages."

The plaintiff obtained a verdict.

HONOUR OF WINTON.

THIS Honour was originally part of the Honour of Leicester, and the reason of its obtaining that name appears to have been as follows: Saier de Quincy, who married Margaret, one of the two sisters and coheiresses of Robert (Fitz Parnell) earl of Leicester, and had, in her right, half of the earldom of Leicester, was created earl of Winchester; to which earl succeeded Roger de Quincy his son, who obtained a grant from king Henry the Third, in the 36th year of his reign, of all the liberties named in the charter, which king John made to the earl of Leicester, of the Honour of Leicester, "ita quod idem Rogerus et heredes sui de cætero ita plene et integre prædictis libertatibus utantur et gaudeant in medietate prædicti Honoris ac si totus Honor ille in manu sua existeret." This grant may be termed the creation of the Honour of Winchester. Earl Roger died in 1264; and an inquisition was taken about that time, which particularly describes the knight's fees which appertained to the Honour.

Earl Roger leaving three daughters his heirs, viz. Margaret the wife of William de Ferrars earl of Derby, Elizabeth married to Alexander Comyn, earl of Buchan in Scotland, and Ellen to Alan le Zouch, the inheritance of the Honour of Winton was divided between them; and that part which Margaret de Ferrers had, she gave to her second son William de Ferrars, with the possessions of the barony of Grooby, together with the perquisites of the court of the Honour of Winton.

King Edward the Fourth, in the 13th year of his reign, ratified and confirmed by inspeximus to sir John Bourchier, knt. and Elizabeth his wife, kinswoman and heir of Roger de Quincy earl of Winton, the charters which were granted by king John to the earl of Leicester, and by king Henry to the earl of Winton.

The abovenamed Elizabeth Bourchier was the grand-daughter and sole heir of William de Ferrars of Grooby, and had been previously married to sir Edward Grey; to her issue by whom this Honour descended, with the barony of Groby, and now belongs to George-Harry Grey, earl of Stamford and Warrington.

The courts for the Honour continue to be held regularly at Leicester, and Nun-Eaton; as well as occasionally at Syston, and other manors belonging to the Honour.

At the Easter court at Leicester, according to antient custom, a shilling is brought into the court-room in a sack-bag across a cowl-staff borne on two men's shoulders, when a scuffle ensues, and the man who can first get possession of the bag has the shilling.

ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION—LEICESTERSHIRE.

Leicester is situated in the diocese of Lincoln and province of Canterbury; it was once a bishop's see, but is now governed by an archdeacon, who exercises jurisdiction over the whole of the county (with the exception of the peculiars hereafter mentioned).—The jurisdiction of the archdeaconry is inhibited once in three years by the lord bishop of the diocese, who holds his triennial visitation once in the above period.—The court of the archdeacon's official is held in the South aile of the parish church of St. Martin in Leicester.

There are several peculiar jurisdictions within the County.

The Peculiar of St. Margaret in Leicester is a prebendal one; it is founded in the Cathedral Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary in Lincoln, and extends over the parish of Saint Margaret, and the chapelry of Knighton, which lies contiguous to Leicester[1]. A Prebendary exercises spiritual cognizance over this exempt district, and holds his court in the church of Saint Margaret; in which court, he has the power of proving wills, granting administrations, marriage licences, &c.—The patronage of St. Margaret is also vested in the Prebendary.—The rev. John Palmer, B. A. is the present Prebendary. See the Prebendal Seal, with those of the Commissary and Official, in Plate XLI. figs. 7, 8, 9, p. 558. Another Official Seal is given in Plate XLIX. fig. 5.

The Peculiar of Rothley[2] is exempt from the general ecclesiastical jurisdiction: this peculiar, extends over the villages of Rothley, Wikeham, Gaddesby, Keam (two or three houses in which I believe, are subject to the archdeacon's power), Grimstone, Wartnaby, Caldwell; it also includes certain parts of Somerby, South Croxton, Mountsorrel, Baresby, and Saxulby; but the churches and chapels belonging to these latter villages and town are in the archdeaconry.—The rev. Thomas Robinson, M. A. (vicar of St. Mary in Leicester) is the present commissary of this peculiar: he holds his court in the parish church of Rothley.

The Peculiar of Groby[3] includes the villages of Ratby, Groby, Botcheston, Newtown Linford, Glenfield (the church of which is supposed to be in the archdeaconry), and Swithland: parts of Ansty, Cropston, and Stanton under Bardon, are also in this peculiar. The Rev. Robert Martin of Ansty is the present commissary of this jurisdiction.

The Peculiar of Evington[4] is governed by a commissary, who holds his court in the church at Evington: rev. Mr. Sherrard Coleman is the present commissary.

In a State of the Archdeaconry of Leicester 1564, Bowden Magna is mentioned among the Peculiars, as an Impropriation belonging to Christ Chu. Oxford[5].

The venerable and highly-esteemed vicar of Greenwich (Dr. Burnaby) is the present Archdeacon of Leicester: he holds his visitation twice in every year.

CANAL FROM LEICESTER TO MARKET HARBOROUGH.

An act of parliament having been obtained, for varying the line of communication of the intended Canal from Leicester to the River Nen (see p. clxviii.); the work, which had been for some time suspended, was renewed with great industry; and the Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Union Canal is now completed as far as Market Harborough.

Nov. 20, 1810, at the Half-yearly General Meeting of the Proprietors of this Canal, held at the Bell inn, Leicester, Richard Gresley, esq. in the chair, a very favourable report from the Committee was read; stating the great increase of tonnages, since the opening of the Canal to Harborough, and the evident advantages which will accrue from the intended line from that place to Stamford; and it was unanimously resolved, to give, collectively and individually, the most strenuous support to that undertaking. It was also unanimously resolved, that the Chairman of the Committee, and two other members, be deputed to present to Joseph Cradock, esq. a gilt cup, as a tribute of the said Company's respect for the uniform attention he has shewn on every occasion to the said Company and its interests; and to convey the high sense which the Company entertain of Mr. Cradock's assistance, during the progress, and to the opening of the said Canal to Market Harborough.

A Plan of the immense Reservoir of this Canal, near Gumley and Saddington, surveyed by J. Varley, junior, in 1797, is here given in Plate XLVIII. at the expence of the worthy Chairman.

The Seals of three of the Leicestershire Canal Companies[6] are here given, in Plate XLIX.

DOMESDAY BOOK.

The four following articles in Domesday I have not been able to appropriate.

Twelve ploughlands in Cliborne, which in the time of king Edward had employed ten ploughs, and were valued at forty shillings, were worth sixty shillings at the general survey, when they were held by Robert de Veci. In the demesne were three ploughs and six bondmen; and ten villans, with six socmen and six bordars and one foreigner, had five ploughs. There were sixteen acres of meadow[1]. Robert de Veci had three houses in the borough of Leicester, with sac and soc belonging to Cliborne[2].

Nine ploughlands all but one yard land in Elvestone, which in the reign of the Confessor had been valued at twenty shillings, were worth thirty shillings at the general survey, when they were held by Hugo de Grentemaisnell. The land was equal to six ploughs. Thirteen socmen, with one villan and two bordars, had four ploughs. There were twenty acres of meadow[3].

Four ploughlands in Plotelei, which in the time of king Edward had been held by Leuric, employed four ploughs, and were valued at ten shillings, were worth thirty shillings at the general survey, when they were held by Robert, one of the homagers of the earl of Mellent. Two ploughs were then in the demesne, and two bondmen; and four villans, with one bordar, had one plough. There were two acres of meadow[4].

At the general survey Nigell held three waste ploughlands in Windesers under Henry de Ferieres. In the time of king Edward this land was held freely by Aluric, and employed two ploughs[5].

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

In the List of Baronets, p. xlvii*. add thus:

"In the chancel of Combe Flory church, Somersetshire, a mural monument of white and Sienna marble is thus inscribed:

"Sacred to the memory of Alexander Malet, M. A. rector of this parish, and of Maiden Newton in the county of Dorset; and a prebendary of the church of Gloucester; whose exemplary virtues added dignity to his profession, and lustre to the antient family from whom he was descended. He was a kind husband, an affectionate parent, and a cordial friend. To his surviving acquaintance his death is an inestimable loss; to himself the commencement of an endless felicity. He died Sept. 19, 1775, aged 71." Arms: Azure, three escallops Or, Malet; impaling, Argent, on a bend Sable, three annulets Or, St. Lo[6].—"This gentleman's preferments all together produced 700*l.* a year. He had two sons and three daughters; 1. Charles, who under the patronage of Mr. Boddam, when governor of Bombay, in about 26 years acquired not quite 100,000*l.* and has purchased an estate in Somersetshire, which an eminent attorney, who married one of his sisters, looked out for him. Another sister was the wife of colonel Dunsey, of the third regiment of guards, and aid de camp to the king, who died at St. Domingo, Feb. 1794. (Gent. Mag. vol. LXIV. p. 279.) Her other sister is believed to be unmarried: and his younger brother was named Alexander." R. G.

P. 321. 1307, 1 Edw. II. by writ ad quod dampnum, Thomas duke of Lancaster was allowed, &c. to give 3 messuages, 4 acres and 1 rood of land with xxii*s* to the hospital of St. Leonard.

1322-3, 16 Edw. II. a grant of Simon de Montford, earl of Leicester, of 7*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* was confirmed.

1 Edw. III. 1327. Philip Danet was permitted to give 3 messuages and 5 virgates and a half of land.

P. 294. The ring here mentioned was not found in the Abbey meadow, but, in a field on the other (the South) side Leicester, called St. Mary's field.

P. 324. A pension of 10*s.* was payable to the Bishop of Lincoln, from the Hospital of St. John, at Leicester, at Michaelmas.

P. 329. A Lease from John Whestones, dean of the college of Newarke within Leycester, and the chaplains of the same, to Robert Browne, of Leycester, carpenter, of a messuage within the North gate of Leycester, for 41 years, without any rent for the first three years, and afterwards at a rent of 2*s.* a year. Dated Sept. 22, 4 Hen. VIII.[7] See the Seal, Plate XLIX. fig. 4.

P. 348. After the dissolution of the College, Mr. William Fowkes was master of this hospital; and of him, Henry earl of Huntingdon purchased the wardenship, who, in 1609, 7 Jac. I. offered it to the town of Leicester, upon condition that they would pay the earl for it as much as he gave to the said William Fowkes, which was agreed to at a meeting of the twenty-four aldermen, and twenty-four of the seniors of the company of 48, Feb. 19, 1609-10. Soon after which, the king, at the request of the said earl, issued out his letters patent, whereby he changed the name of "St. Mary," to that of "The Holy Trinity of the Newark[8]," and appointed the mayor of Leicester for the time being to be the master or warden of it, whose fee is £.13. 6*s.* 8*d.*; and he enters on this office on the Friday after he is chosen mayor. The town chamberlains take care to receive the annual payment from the dutchy, and on Friday every week pay to the poor people their allowance, &c. Upon the dissolution, many of the possessions belonging to this College were granted to Thomas Fisher, alias Hawkins, esq. of Warwick; but whether he or some other had the houses in the Newark, says Mr. Carte, does not appear. An additional view of Trinity Hospital is given in Pl. XLIX.

P. 436. Feb. 21, 1684-5, John Broadhurst, a button-maker in the Borough of Leicester, confined in the gaol there on information of setting fire to three houses, and publishing a scandalous and horrid libel against the Government, broke out of gaol; and a reward was offered by the mayor for his apprehension[9].

P. 447. A worthy and respectable Octogenarian Friend has favoured me with the following remarks: "I well remember this storm. It happened on the evening of one of the race nights. I was very young; but permitted by my parents to go to the ball with some ladies at their house. The thunder and lightning were so tremendous as to prevent the ball being opened for more than an hour after the company were assembled; and I recollect my mother saying, that some of the coachmen observed, "they drove devils, and not ladies." That the first floors in many houses were filled with water, and the cellars overflowed, I believe to be true. But that many waggon loads of ice were to be seen on the Saturday morning following I do absolutely contradict; for, being at that time on the spot, and an inquisitive boy of the age of 10, at the freeschool, then in a flourishing state, I must have heard, and most probably been a witness of so extraordinary (not to say, in the month of August, almost miraculous) a sight. J. H."

APPENDIX, Nº XVII. LEICESTER ABBEY.

RENTALE NOVUM GENERALE MONASTERII B. MARIE DE PRATIS LEYCESTRIE, meritò inſcriptum ab authore, MEMORIALE FRATRIS WILL'I CHARYTE Prioris ibidem, Qui hunc librum incredibili labore compoſuit, ſuâque manu deſcripſit.

Opus tantum aggreſſus anno MCCCCLXXVII, & regis Edwardi Quarti XVII.
Nam & propriâ manu ſcripſiſſe apparet XXV codices ſive rotulos materiis diverſos, quorum ultimum ſcripſit A. D. MDII, ætatis ſuæ LXXXI, & poſt ingreſſum ſuum in religionem LXIII:
Omnia tam accurato methodo congeſta ut nihil poſſit clariùs exprimere perfectiſſimi adminiſtratoris & œconomi imaginem.

" Has ſacras ædes pietas conſtruxit avorum, Quas ſucceſſores devaſtant more luporum."

[Liber Gulielmi Laud, Archiepiſcopi Cantuar', & Cancellarii Univerſitatis Oxon', 1635[1].]

GULIELMUS CHARYTE, Prior monaſterii auguſti & amœni B. Mariæ de Pratis Leyceſtriæ, chartas omnes atque codices ad dictum monaſterium pertinentes ſummâ curâ excuſſit perlegitque, & exindè librum ingentem compoſuit, quem inſcripſit Rentale novum generale monaſterii B. Marie de Pratis Leyceſtrie. Opus hoc eximium inchoavit anno Domini CIↃCDLXXVII°, regis Edwardi IV^ti XVII°, & ad exitum perduxit A. D. CIↃDII°, ætatis ſuæ LXXXI°, à monaſticæ vitæ habitu ſuſcepto LXIII°; cujus exemplar, ab auctore ipſo maximam partem exaratum, in Bibliothecâ Bodlejanâ, beneficio maximi præſulis & ſanctiſſimi martyris Gulielmi Laudi, jam exſtat. Quod ſanè rerum Anglicarum ſcriptoribus, aliiſque rei antiquariæ ſtudioſis, magno uſui eſſe poteſt. Nam auctor erat (ut cuilibet librum evolventi conſtabit) vir probus, ſapiens, ſagax, diligens, & qui complura in monaſterium benignè contulit. Unde mirari ſubeat nihil apud Lelandum, Baleum, Pitſeumve, de eo memoratum occurrere; aut demùm apud Gulielmum Burtonum, agri Leyceſtrenſis deſcriptorem luculentiſſimum. T. HEARNE."

1. Hiſtoria fundationis, & progenies fundatoris[2].

MEMORANDUM quod Robertus comes Mellenti, veniens in Angliam cum Willielmo duce Normannie, adeptus conſulatum Leyceſtrie ex dono dicti ducis & conqueſtoris Anglie, deſtructâ prius civitate Leiceſtriâ, cum caſtello & eccleſiâ infra caſtellum, tempore predicti conqueſtoris, re-edificavit ipſam eccleſiam Sancte Marie infra caſtellum, ſtatuens ibidem XII canonicos ſeculares & unum decanum, conferens iiſdem & approprians omnes eccleſias Leiceſtrie preter eccleſiam Sancte Margarete, que non erat ſue ditionis, eo quod fuit & eſt prebenda eccleſie Lincolnienſis, cum quinque carucatis terre, ex parte boreali civitatis, & aliis poſſeſſionibus in ipſâ civitate, & cum omnibus eccleſiis de ſocis de Schepeſheved & Halſo, & pluribus aliis eccleſiis, redditibus, & poſſeſſionibus.

Ipſo quoque Roberto defuncto, ſucceſſit ei Robertus le Cocrea, filius & heres ejuſdem; &, de conſilio domini Alexandri tunc epiſcopi Lincolnie, & aliorum diſcretorum, fundavit abbathiam iſtam de Pratis Leiceſtrie; transferens poſſeſſiones & prebendas dicte eccleſie Sancte Marie de Caſtro, cum omnibus aliis redditibus & poſſeſſionibus ſuis, in uſum canonicorum iſtius abbathie; largiens & approprians eiſdem, tam per ſe quàm per ſuos, plures alias eccleſias, redditus, & poſſeſſiones, cum unâ carucatâ terre in Leiceſtriâ jacente ad cuneos[3] monete, cum prato adjacente uſque Narſike, & aliis pertinentiis ſuis. Qui quidem Robertus, de conſenſu Amicie uxoris ſue, ſumpſit in abbathiâ iſtâ habitum noſtre religionis; vivens juſtè & ſanctè quindecim annis & ampliùs. Ipſa quoque Amicia uxor ſua ſanctamonialis apud Eton eſt effecta.

Iſto Roberto fundatore noſtro defuncto, ſucceſſit ei in hereditatem Robertus filius ejus, & vocabatur Robertus as Blanche meyns; qui Robertus accepit in uxorem Petronillam filiam Hugonis de Grantmenyl, cum honore de Hynkelee, & aliis poſſeſſionibus ipſius Hugonis, quas habuit in Angliâ; et extunc primò honor de Hynkelee eſt conjunctus comitatu Leyceſtrie. Et ex dictâ Petronillâ genuit tres filios & duas filias; ſcilicet Robertum, qui vocabatur Robertus filius Petronille, ad differentiam predictorum; & qui ſucceſſit patri ſuo in hereditatem, ſed nullum habuit heredem de ſe genitum; & Willielmum leproſum, ſecundum filium; et Galfridum epiſcopum Sancte Andree in Scotiâ, tertium filium; & Amiciam primogenitam filiam, & Margaretam juniorem.

Illo quoque Roberto as Blanche meyns in redeundo de Terrâ Sanctâ defuncto, & apud Duraz in partibus tranſmarinis ſepulto, ſucceſſit ei predictus Robertus filius ſuus & heres, vocatus filius Petronille, in hereditatem. Ipſo quoque ſine herede defuncto, diviſa eſt hereditas[4] inter predictas ſorores, Amiciam & Margaretam, eo quod dicti duo fratres ſui fuerant jam defuncti. Et Amicia deſponſata fuit domino Simoni de Monteforti, patri illius Simonis, qui moriebatur apud Eveſham; et Margareta deſponſata fuit Sayero de Quincy. Et facti ſunt duo comitatus, ſcilicet de Leiceſter & Wynceſter, de comitatu Leyceſtrie priùs integrè exiſtente.

2. Adhuc de fundatione, & progenie fundatoris[5].

Robertus comes Mellenti venit cum Willielmo (Conqueſtore) in Angliam; cui Roberto datus eſt comitatus Leiceſtrenſis. Iſte Robertus reedificavit eccleſiam Sancte Marie de caſtro Leyceſtrenſi; & poſuit in eadem canonicos ſeculares, & reſtituit eis terras, poſſeſſiones, & eccleſias.

Robertus Boſſu, filius ejuſdem Roberti de Mellent, de conſenſu Alexandri epiſcopi Lincolnienſis, anno Gratie MCXLIII, fundavit monaſterium Beate Marie de Pratis Leyceſtrie, in honorem Aſſumptionis ejuſdem glorioſe Virginis; & de eccleſiis, terris, & poſſeſſionibus antedictorum canonicorum ſecularium, cum multis aliis ſupererogatis, tam eccleſiis, aliiſque poſſeſſionibus & redditibus, luculenter dotavit, & eas in uſum canonicorum regularium transformavit; qui etiam in eodem monaſterio, de conſenſu Amicie uxoris ſue, canonicus regularis factus eſt, & annis XV in habitu regulari ibidem Chriſto militans, canonicus vitam finiens, obdormivit in pace, in latere ibidem chori dextro ſepultus, ſcilicet anno Gratie MCLXVII.

Iſte Robertus fundavit abbathiam de Gerondonâ, monachorum; & monaſterium ſanctimonialium de Etonâ, in quo Amicia uxor ejuſdem Roberti, ex mutuo aſſenſu viri ſui, facta eſt ſanctimonialis, de reſiduo vite ſue Deo ſerviens. Undè ipſe factus eſt canonicus regularis, & illa ſanctamonialis.

3. De fundatione & dotatione ejuſdem [1].

IN nomine Sancte & Individue Trinitatis: notum ſit omnibus ſancte Dei eccleſie filiis, preſentibus & futuris, quatenus ab Incarnatione Domini anno MCVII, regnante Henrico rege Anglorum, Robertus comes Mellenti conſulatum Leiceſtrie adeptus, ibi in honorem ſancte Dei genitricis Marie, & Omnium Sanctorum veneratione, pro animâ Willielmi regis Anglie, expugnatoris Anglorum, ejuſque uxoris Matildis regine, & eorum filii Willielmi Secundi regis; atque futuram memoriam anime Henrici regis & ejus uxoris regine Matildis Secunde, & pro eorum liberis; & pro animâ Rogeri de Bellomonte, & ejus uxoris Adeline, & pro ſeipſo & ſuâ uxore Elizabethâ, & eorum filiis; & pro animâ fratris ſui Henrici comitis; & pro animâ Albrede ſororis ſue, abbatiſſe; & pro animabus omnium Henrici regis & aliorum predeceſſorum & fidelium defunctorum, eccleſiam reedificavit, in quâ canonicos & decanum, & eorum capitulum, conceſſu regis Henrici & Roberti epiſcopi Lincolnienſis eccleſie canonicè diſpoſuit; ad quorum victum ſtatuit omnia que eadem eccleſia antiquitùs habuerat, in terris, & decimis, & omnibus ſuis conſuetudinibus reconformatis eiſdem in dedicatione ipſius eccleſie per Robertum epiſcopum Lincolnienſem. Preter hec donavit eidem eccleſie ad pontem de North quinque carucatas terre, & octo manſiones hominum; & in aliâ parte civitatis tres virgatas terre, & tres bovatas terre. Et idem, de ſuo proprio redditu civitatis Legreceſtrie, ſex libratas per annum, & extra civitatem Legeceſtrie eccleſiam Omnium Sanctorum, & eccleſiam Beati Petri, & eccleſiam Sancti Martini, que Radulfus Pincerna dedit predicte eccleſie in augmentum prebende; & eccleſiam de Lileburnâ, cum terris & decimis omnibus eidem eccleſie pertinentibus, & ſexaginta ſolidos per annum de redditibus Lileburne. Et Radulfus Pincerna dedit predicte eccleſie Sancte Marie triginta ſolidos per annum in Blingeſſet & in Tormedeſtunâ. Robertus comes Mellenti donavit Sancte Marie tres carucatas terre, & unam virgatam terre; & molendinum de ponte North ad veſtitum infirmorum in cuſtodiâ canonicorum commendavit. Et in Burtonâ Iſabella comitiſſa . . . . . [Abbinc recordum laceratur.]

4. Hiſtoria de terrarum donationibus [2].

Habemus, ex dono fundatoris noſtri, in primâ fundatione hujus monaſterii, omnes prebendas & poſſeſſiones, que fuerunt canonicorum ſecularium eccleſie Sancte Marie infra caſtellum; ſcilicet, eccleſiam Sancte Marie, cum totâ poſſeſſione in parochiâ ſuâ, cum terris & paſcuis & pratis, & omnibus aliis pertinentiis ſuis, cum omnibus libertatibus quas Robertus comes Mellenti pater ſuus predicte eccleſie ante conceſſerat. Item quinque virgatas terre extra portam de North, & octo manſiones hominum; et in aliâ parte civitatis tres virgatas terre, & tres bovatas terre; & de redditibus Leyceſtrie ſex libras per annum. Eccleſias quoque omnes Leiceſtrie, tam infra muros quàm extra, que ſunt ſue ditionis, cum domibus & manſuris, cum terris & pratis, & omnibus pertinentiis ſuis. Juratores dicunt, quod non eſt ad dampnum, ſi rex concedat Johanni Twywell, Johanni Anſty, & aliis, quod ipſi vi meſſuagia, xvi cotagia, iii virgatas, unam bovatam, unam acram, & unam rodam terre, octo acras prati, xxiii ſolidatas, & iiii denarios redditûs, & redditum unius libre cumini, cum pertinentiis, in Leiceſtriâ & ſuburbio ejuſdem ville, Humberſton, Burſtall, Barkeby, & Lokyngton, dare poſſint abbati & conventui Beate Marie de Pratis Leiceſtr'.

56. Licentia regis [2].

Rex omnibus ad quos, &c. ſalutem. Sciatis quod, cum nos nuper conceſſerimus & licentiam dederimus, pro nobis & ſucceſſoribus noſtris, quantum in nobis fuit, dilectis nobis in Chriſto abbati & conventui domûs Leiceſtrie, que de fundatione progenitorum noſtrorum exiſtit, quod ipſi terras & tenementa ad valorem xx marcarum per annum, tam de feodo ſuo proprio quam alieno (exceptis terris & tenementis que de nobis tenentur in capite), adquirere poſſint, habendas & tenendas ſibi & ſucceſſoribus in perpetuum, ſtatuto de terris & tenementis ad manum mortuam non ponendis edito non obſtante, prout in breve noſtro continetur: Nos (volentes conceſſionem noſtram predictam effectui debito mancipari) conceſſimus & licentiam dedimus, pro nobis & heredibus noſtris, quantum in nobis eſt, Johanni Oxcliff & Johanni Coiton, quod ipſi unum meſſuagium, xii acras terre, & iiii acras prati, cum pertinentiis, in Cokerham; & Johanni Twywell, vicario eccleſie de Lokyngton, Johanni Anſty, Ricardo Gameſton, Robert of the Halle, & Ricardo Barwe, quod ipſi vi meſſuagia, xv cotagia, iii virgatas, unam bovatam, unam acram, & unam rodam terre, viii acras prati, xxiii ſolidatas & iiii d̄. redditûs, & redditum unius libre cumini, cum pertinentiis, in Leiceſtr' & ſuburbio ejuſdem ville, Humberſton, Burſtall, Barkeby, & Lokyngton (que quidem meſſuagia, cotagia, terre, pratum, & redditus, de nobis non tenentur) dare poſſint & aſſignare prefatis abbati & conventui, habendas & tenendas ſibi & ſucceſſoribus ſuis in perpetuum, in plenam ſatisfactionem dictarum xx marcarum terrarum & tenementorum predictorum in perpetuum; ſalvis tamen capitalibus dominis feodi illius ſerviciis inde debitis & conſuetis in perpetuum.

Teſte rege, apud Beverlac, vii die Septembris.

57. Breve regis Ricardi Secundi Egidio Jurdan de Lughtburg, ut decimas de Woodhouſe, infra parochiam de Barwe ſuper Sore, in com' Leic', ab eo detentas, abbati beate Marie de Pratis reſtitui faciat, ſub periculo quod incumbit [3].

Rex Egidio Jurdan de Lughtburghe ſalutem. Clamore plurium laborante noſtris eſt auribus intimatum, quòd tu, regiam majeſtatem non verendo, nec juſtitie equitatem ponderando, dilectos nobis in Chriſto abbatem & conventum beate Marie de Pratis juxta Leyceſtriam de decimis, oblationibus, proventibus, & obventionibus hameletti ſui de Woodhouſe, infra fines & limites eccleſie parochialis ipſorum abbatis & conventûs de Barwe ſuper Sore, in com' Leic' exiſtentes (quam quidem eccleſiam iidem abbas & conventus & predeceſſores ſui in proprios uſus à tempore quo non extat memoria obtinuerunt), ex ſolâ auctoritate & temerariâ voluntate tuâ, abſque aliquo juris proceſſu, violentèr expellere & ſpoliare preſumpſiſti; decimas, oblationes, proventus, & obventiones predictos penès te, per tempora non modica, contra juſtitiam & ſanam conſcientiam, & voluntatem ipſorum abbatis & conventûs, maligno propoſito adhuc temerè detinendo & nequitèr occupando: Nos igitur, de oppreſſione Sc̃e eccleſie gravitèr commoti, & indempnitati noſtrî & abbatie predicte (que de fundatione progenitorum noſtrorum, quondam regum Anglie, & noſtro patronatu, exiſtit), quatenùs cum juſtitiâ poterimus, proſpicere volentes in hâc parte, ut tenemur, nè (quod abſit!) abbatiam predictam, amiſſione jurium ſuorum, periculis ſubjacere, aut injuriarum & expenſarum profluviis contingat fatigari; tibi, ſub gravi forisfacturâ noſtrâ, precipimus, diſtrictiùs quo poſſumus injungentes, quòd eiſdem abbati & conventui hujuſmodi decimas, oblationes, proventus, & obventiones, ſic ſpoliatos & detentos, &, ex auctoritate tuâ, abſque juris proceſſu occupatos (aut verum valorem eorundem, ſi non exſtent), citra Quindenam Sc̃i Hilarii proximè futuri, liberari & reſtitui facias, ſub periculo quod incumbit. Et, ſi cauſa nobilis ſubfuerit quare id ad mandatum noſtrum facere non debeas, tunc in propriâ perſonâ tuâ ſis coram nobis in cancellariâ noſtrâ in Quindenâ predictâ, ubicunque tunc fueris, cauſam illam ibidem coram nobis oſtenſurum; facturum & recepturum quod per nos conſideratum fuerit in hâc parte, ubi tibi & prefatis abbati & conventui in premiſſis debitum juſtitie complementum equo libramine fieri volumus & exhiberi. Teſte rege, apud Ebor', xx die Decembris. Per ipſum regem.

58. Concordia inter Johannem Lichf' & Covent' epiſcopum, & Philippum abbatem beate Marie de Pratis, de diviſâ & bundâ territoriorum ſuorum ex utrâque parte rivi de Trent in villis de Sallowe & Lokyngton adjacentium [4].

Hec indentura, facta inter venerabilem patrem Johannem, Dei gratiâ, Coventrie & Lichfeilde epiſcopum, ex parte unâ; & Philippum, abbatem eccleſie beate Marie de Pratis, & conventum ejuſdem loci, ex alterâ; teſtatur, quòd cùm dictus epiſcopus teneat & ſeiſitus ſit de manerio de Sallowe, cum pertinentiis, in com' Derb' (de quo manerio idem epiſcopus & predeceſſores ſui ſeiſiti fuerunt & tenuerunt ut de jure epiſcopatûs ſui), quòd quidem manerium eſt adjacens cuidam rivo, qui vocatur Trent; & predicti abbas & conventus & predeceſſores ſui (ut de jure eccleſie ſue beate Marie de Pratis Leiceſtr') tenent & tenuerunt manerium de Lokyngton, cum pertinentiis, in com' Leic', adjacens eidem rivo; cujus quidem rivi curſus, à tempore quo extat memoria, extitit diviſa & bunda ibidem inter comitatus & maneria predicta; & etiam predictus nunc epiſcopus habeat & teneat unam parcellam terre, vocatam Sandholme, in predictâ villâ de Lokyngton, adjacentem predicto rivo, de predictis abbate & conventu, per ſervicium iii ſolidatarum annuatim ſolvendarum; & nunc tardè dictus rivus reliquit antiquum curſum ſuum, & cepit novum curſum per medium dicte terre de Sandholme; dicti abbas & conventus, unanimi aſſenſu & conſenſu, per preſentes conceſſerunt & confirmaverunt, pro ſe & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, quòd predictus epiſcopus & ſucceſſores ſui totam illam partem dicte terre de Sandholme, nunc jacentem ultra dictum rivum de Trent versùs predictum manerium de Sallowe, habeant & teneant quietè, & abſque reclamatione dictorum abbatis & conventûs vel ſucceſſorum ſuorum, in perpetuum; & jam tardè dicti abbas & conventus in alteram partem dicte terre de Sandholme, nunc jacentem ultra rivum dictum de Trent versùs dictum manerium de Lokyngton, ex conceſſione dicti epiſcopi, intraverunt & ſeiſiti fuerunt; quam quidem partem, ſimul cum omnibus aliis terris ejuſdem epiſcopi ibidem, tunc jacentem ultra dictum rivum versùs predictam villam de Lokyngton, prefatus epiſcopus predictis abbati & conventui & ſucceſſoribus ſuis conceſſit, confirmavit, & per preſentes relaxavit; habendam & tenendam eiſdem abbati & conventui & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, quietè & abſque reclamatione predicti epiſcopi & ſucceſſorum in perpetuum. Et inſuper, tam predictus epiſcopus pro ſe & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, quàm predicti abbas & conventus pro ſe & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, conceſſerunt, quòd dictus rivus de Trent, modo & formâ quibus tenet curſum ſuum tempore confectionis preſentium, erit diviſa & bunda in perpetuum inter terras predicti epiſcopi, per iſtam concordiam, versùs Sallowe remanentes; & terras predictorum abbatis & conventûs, per eandem concordiam, remanentes versùs Lokyngton; abſque hoc, quòd dictus epiſcopus vel ſucceſſores ſui in futurum clamabunt aliquam partem terre ultra dictum rivum versùs Lokyngton; & ſimilitèr abſque hoc, quòd dicti abbas & conventus vel ſucceſſores ſui clamabunt aliquam partem terre ultra dictum rivum versùs dictum manerium de Sallowe in perpetuum. Et ulteriùs, iidem abbas & conventus per preſentes remiſerunt, relaxaverunt, & de ſe & ſucceſſoribus ſuis quietas clamaverunt, prefato epiſcopo & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, dictas tres ſolidatas redditûs, & omnia alia ſervicia de predictâ terrâ de Sandholme ſibi debita. Ac etiam concordatum eſt per preſentes inter partes predictas, quòd tam predictus epiſcopus & ſucceſſores ſui, quàm predicti abbas & conventus & ſucceſſores ſui, & quilibet eorum, ex parte ſuâ de Trent, ponere poſſint pilas, & figere palas, & plantare arbores, pro defenſione & ſalvatione terrarum ſuarum, rationabilitèr, ad manutenendum & cuſtodiendum dictum rivum in ſuo curſu quem nunc tenet, abſque perturbatione aliquali in perpetuum. In cujus rei teſtimonium, partes predicte preſentibus indenturis alternatim ſigilla ſua appoſuerunt. Data tertio die Junii, anno Domini MCCCCII, & regni regis Henrici Quarti poſt Conqueſtum tertio.

59. Philippus, ep̄s, &c. Ricardo abbati, &c. Cùm dilecta in Chriſto filia Iſolda N. pompas ſeculi & mundane converſationis illecebras volens, ut aſſerit, in eterni theſauri divitias commutare, in quandam domum infra cemeterium eccleſie parochialis beati Petri Leyceſtrie, juxta eccleſiam ſituatam, ubi perpetuam vitam committere ſuam ad id perelegit ſpiritualem manſionem recludi deſideret firmitèr & proponat, & ſic ſub vitâ anachoriticâ, ſpretis mundi blanditiis, Creatorem ſuum valeat liberiùs contemplari: Nos, ejuſdem Iſolde in hâc parte devotionem & ſalubre propoſitum in Domino commendantes, ac de veſtris circumſpectione, fidelitate, & puritate conſtante plenam in Dño fiduciam obtinentes, ad examinandum propoſitum mentem communem dicte Iſolde, & ſi vos eam in propoſito & intentione hujuſmodi perſeverantem inveneritis ſtabilem & conſtantem, ac aliàs ad hoc habilem, idoneam, & nullatenùs vacillantem, ſuper quibus veſtram conſtantiam oneramus, & nichil in hâc parte obvenerit de canonicis inſtitutis ad recludendam ipſam Iſoldam, ut prefertur votum quod eſt promiſſum, faciend', admittend', & eidem impendend' habitum in hâc parte congruum cum officio conſueto, & ad expedend' omnia alia & ſingula que circa hujuſmodi officium de jure ſeu conſuetudine quomodolibet requiruntur, vobis tenore preſentium committimus vices noſtras; mandantes quatenus de toto proceſſu veſtro in hoc habendo nos, expedito negotio, certificatis literis veſtris patentibus, habentes hunc tenorem. 60. De cantariâ in Collegio Novi Operis.

Thomas Langley, ep̄s Dunelmenſis, dedit nobis patronatum cujuſdam cantarie duorum capellanorum in Novo Collegio Leyc'; qui quidem ep̄s fuit executor teſtamenti d̄ni Joh̄is ducis Lancaſtr'; ſcil', ex ejus voluntate, & de terris ipſius, fundavit predictam cantariam [2].

61. Compoſitio inter archiepiſcopum Cantuar' & decanum & capitulum Lincolnie.

Univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, &c. Bonifacius, miſeratione divinâ, archiepiſcopus Cantuarienſ', &c. Poſt magnas lites & varias, tandem ſub hâc formâ concordatum eſt; videlicet, quòd quoties in futurum ſedem Linc' per mortem vel ceſſionem epiſcopi, &c. vacare contigerit, decanus & capitulum, &c. Item dictus decanus, vel ejus gerens vices, toto tempore vacationis, liberè exercebit juriſdictionem epiſcopalem in eccleſiâ Linc', tam in canonicis quàm in clericis & beneficiis, &c. & in domibus religioſis que ſunt de patronatu Linc', eccleſie videlicet Eyneſham & Dorcheſtr', &c. Item viſitabit decanus Linc' jure epiſcopali in ſingulis archidiaconatibus duo monaſteria, exceptis monaſteriis que ſunt de patronatu domini regis, & non plura, &c. ut in dictâ compoſitione, que eſt in VI libro Chartwary; unde benè patet, quòd monaſterium iſtud non debet decanus Linc' viſitare tempore vacationis, quia eſt de patronatu domini regis: Veruntamen, ratione hujus compoſitionis, voluit magiſter Johannes Makworthe, tunc decanus Linc', iſtud monaſterium viſitâſſe; ſcil', tempore fratris W. Sadyngton abbatis; qui ipſum decanum inhibuit, per Ricardum Taylard generoſum ſuum, extra portas monaſterii; qui dictus decanus eas portas omninò voluit ingredi. Qui ore inhibitus receſſit, & cum ſuis in villam ivit; & ſic deinceps viſitare ceſſavit [3].

62. Memorandum, quòd, anno Dñi MCCCCXXXIX°, in die Paſche, d̄nus Johannes Bayford, capellanus magiſtri Roberti Matſeyn, magiſtri Sc̄i Leònardi, recepit duos ſervientes predicti magiſtri ad ſacramentum Euchariſtie & communionis in eâdem capellâ, in magnum prejudicium abbatis & conventûs Leyceſtrie, &c. Super quod gravamen dictus abbas petit judicium fieri coram magiſtro Johanne Wardale, tunc commiſſario epiſcopi Lincoln'; qui quidem commiſſarius citari fecit predictum Johannem Bayford ad comparend', &c. Et, quia predictus Johannes Bayford, nec aliquis alius pro ſe, aliqua privilegia oſtendere voluit, quorum autoritate infra dictam capellam ſacramenta miniſtrare potuit, dictus commiſſarius, contra dictum Johannem judicialitèr procedens, talem ei injunxit penitentiam; ſcilicet, quòd, die Dominicâ ſequenti, in eccleſiâ Sc̄i Leonardi ad proceſſionem incederet, nudus pedes & caput, & ſine camiſiâ, inter crucem & chorum, portans in manibus unum cereum trium librarum, ut, ingreſsâ proceſſione, ipſe ſtaret in medio chori dicendo ſeptem pſalmos, &c. ut in rotulo Johannis Schepiſhed de officio ſacriſte & fabrice [4].

63. Antiloquium Rotuli cujuſdam omnibus vicinis eccleſiis conventualibus miſſi, ad earum preces pro animabus benefactorum, &c. exorandum [5].

Univerſis Chriſti fidelibus, & crucis Chriſti amicis, Johannes, permiſſione divinâ, abbas monaſterii beate Marie de Pratis Leyceſtrie, & ejuſdem loci conventus, ordinis Sc̄i Auguſtini, Lincoln' dioceſis, ſalutem & letis gaudere diebus, cum ſalubri memoriâ memorari noviſſima uraniaque regni agalmata ſcandere poſt laborem. Quoniam, exigente primi parentis prevaricatione, prolis poſteritas, ab immortalitatis amœnitate, in hanc erumnoſam & lugubrem laboris doloriſque dejecta convallem, corruptionis mortalitatem cogitur induere; & in tantâ poſitus tenebrarum denſitate, utrùm amore vel odio ſi dignus ſit, non conceditur ſibi ſcire; &, licèt tempus gratie nobis attribuatur ad enervationem concupiſcentie & virtutum exercitium, ut à ſtatu turbinis ad quietem patrie tendamus; ipſa tamen peccata levia, que ex neceſſitate indiès proveniunt, ſecum cremalia ferunt, & in terrâ terre globus incluſus nequaquam ulteriùs cuiquam ſufficit ſubvenire: ingens eſt igitur caritatis officium, devotaque ſanitatis cogitatio, ut hiis, quòs exutos corpore futurum ſeculum jam ſuſcepituros, piis procuremus ſacramentorum remediis & devotis rationum ſuffragiis ſubvenire; que quidem magna, ex miſerantis Dei munere, ſolatia dinoſcantur eſſe vivorum, & juvamina defunctorum. Quia igitur, pro ſe laborat qui pro aliis orat, & oratio ejus in ſuum ſinum convertitur; auras veſtre pietatis lacrimoſâ prece pulſamus, quatenùs pro animabus defunctorum noſtrorum (quorum nomina vobis tranſmittimus ſcripta) orationum ſuffragia, abſolutionum remedia, & oblationum ſolatia, caritatis intuitu, ſalubriter impendatis; & Johanni Parre, hujus legationis bajulo (ne deficiat in viâ victus) beneficia cum favore benevolo dignemini exhibere; ſcientes, quòd, quicquid à vobis petimus pro noſtris fieri, pro veſtris in caſu conſimili volumus obligari. Felicitèr valeat univerſitas veſtra, Creatori omnium continuè placitura! Dat' in domo noſtrâ capitulari Leyceſtrie, xx° die Octobris, mcccclviii.

Tunc inquirat utrùm illa materia anteà unquam fuit in lite vel in placito; & ſi ſic, tunc inquirat & videat ſi ſint aliqua placita de illâ materiâ, vel finales concordie, ſententie definitive, ſeu compoſitiones vel ſententie date coram judicibus ordinariis, &c. Et pro penſionibus rectorum, vicariorum, & pro portionibus eccleſiarum, & pro jure patronatûs earum, & pro capellis earundem, & quomodo ipſe capelle debent deſervire per capellanos ſuos; pro omnibus iſtis requirat & videat Matriculum epiſcopi. Et pro penſionibus rectorum & vicariorum, & portionibus eccleſiarum, vide taxationes decimarum, & ſententias definitivas datas coram judicibus ordinariis. Et pro penſionibus vicariorum, videat ordinationes eorum. Tunc omnino & pro omnibus aliis requirat ſollicitè quanto temporis habuimus poſſeſſionem illius rei, & quando & quo anno ultimo habuimus poſſeſſionem illius rei; quod quanto tardius tanto melius. Et pro omnibus predictis ſemper provideat hunc predictum Rentale fratris Willi [2].

2. Mem', quòd ſi quis voluit ſcrutare veritatem, & cognoſcere certitudinalitèr quomodo firme eccleſiarum noſtrarum & terrarum dominicalium, & conſuetudines tenentium, & omnium reddituum noſtrorum receptus, decreverunt, ab anno Domini M°ccc°xxxv° uſque ad annum Domini M^{m}cccc^{m} ſeptuageſimum, vel ab anno regis Edwardi Tertii ix° uſque ad annum regis Edwardi Quarti ix^{m}, debet ſcrutare & videre Rentalia fratris W. Geryn & fratris Galfridi, & taxationes eccleſiarum, & rotulos celarariorum ante peſtilentiam, & rotulos de Hem^{g}, & Rentale fratris W. Charyte; & in iſtis Rotulis inveniet certitudinalitèr valorem dominicalium maneriorum, firmariorum, & omnium reddituum noſtrorum, predicto anno regis Edwardi III. Tunc videat & ſcrutetur Rentalia moderna, ſcil', ad annum regis Edwardi Quarti ix^{m}, &c.; illic inveniet valorem dominicalium maneriorum, &c. ut tunc. Hoc facto, tunc poterit cognoſcere quomodo predicte firme, &c. degenerent [3].

3. Mem', quòd omnes iſte carte duplicantur; ſcil', Carta Henrici III. regis, de licentiâ perquirendi Parcum noſtrum & le Stokyng de Simone de Monteforte.

4. Mem', quòd iſta non confirmantur per cartam confirmationis alicujus regis; ſcil', Glenfeld, Croxton, Briculſworth, Mynworth, Merſton, Kyrkby Bellers, Newbold, Hamilton, Thurmaſton, Okethorpe, Gaddyſby, Shakerſton, Belgrave, Coſyngton, Howes, & Stretton.

Iſta tantùm confirmantur per cartam confirmationis regis Henrici VII; ſcil', Boſton, Thorpbarkby, Nowſley, Odeby, Mountſorel, & Bariſby [5].

5. Privilegia Apoſtolica [6].

Eugenius III. Papa, MCXLVIII, conceſſit, quòd nullus petat decimas de laboribus noſtris, vel de novalibus quos propriis manibus colimus, ſive de nutrimentis animalium noſtrorum. Item quòd nullus quilibet ſurreptione, aut injuſtitiâ, ſeu violentiâ, p̃ponatur in electionem, ſi quem fratres cum conſilio vel fratrum pars conſilii ſanioris providerint eligendum. Sepulturam ipſius loci vel monaſterii liberam eſſe decernimus, ut eorum qui illic ſepeliri deliberaverint donationi extreme voluntatis, ſi forte excommunicati vel interdicti ſint non obſtante, ſalvâ cum juſtitiâ interdictâ eccleſie. Item quòd nos poſſimus eligere ſacerdotes de fratribus noſtris ad eccleſias noſtras, & eos epiſcopis preſentare, quibus, ſi idonei fuerint, eis curam eccleſiarum committant.

Lucius III. Papa conceſſit, MCLXXXI, quòd nullus ſine causâ rationabili & manifeſtâ in nos vel eccleſiam noſtram ſententiam excommunicationis ſeu interdicti audeat promulgare.

Urbani III. confirmatio MCLXXXVI, ſuper hiis que inſtitute fuerunt ab Alexandro [7] epõ & fundatore noſtro.

Confirmatio Celeſtini III. Pape, MCLXXXXI, ſuper amicabilem compoſitionem inter nos & priorem de Trentham, de eccleſiâ de Brakley.

Confirmatio Innocentii IV. ſuper omnibus poſſeſſionibus ñris, & ſpecialitèr ſuper eccleſiis de Cokeram & de Yolgrave.

Alexander IV. Papa, MCCLX, conceſſit, quòd nulli eccleſiaſtico perſone liceat indebitas & injuſtas exactiones in eccleſiam noſtram exercere. Item quando commune interdictum terre fuerit, liceat nobis, clauſis januis, excluſis excommunicatis interdictiſve, pulſatis tintinnabulis, ſuppreſsâ voce, in eccleſiâ noſtrâ divina officia celebrare. Item quòd liberè liceat nobis, clericos ſive laicos, liberos & abſolutos, de ſec̃lo fugientes, ad converſionem ſuſcipere, & in ñro collegio retinere. Conceſſit etiam, ut nemini liceat eccleſias noſtras indebitis & inconſuetis exonerationibus vel injuſtitie gravaminibus fatigare.

Honorius IV. Papa conceſſit, ne aliquis, ratione cujuſcunque prave conſuetudinis, animalia noſtra vel bona capiat aut vadiari preſumat. Item quòd liceat nobis uti privilegiis & indulgentiis noſtris, dummodo non ſit nobis per preſcriptionem aliàs derogatum.

Nicholaus IV. Papa conceſſit, quòd quilibet abbas hujus monaſterii liberè & licitè poſſit in capite uti pilio, conſtitutione vel conſuetudine non obſtantibus.

Celeſtinus V. Papa conceſſit, quòd non licet contra privilegia apoſtolica interdicere vel excommunicare.

Gregorius XI. Papa conceſſit privilegium de licentiâ comedendi lacticinia in tempore Adventûs Domini. Item de licentiâ celebrandi miſſam in die. Item de IIII cantariis. Item de licentiâ habendi altare portabile.

Item Edwardus rex Tertius conceſſit eidem abbati habere nundinas vel feriam pro leporariis [2], & aliis canibus cujuſcunque conditionis eſſent, emendis & vendendis, &c. ut in Cronicis Henrici Knyton [3].

Item perquiſivit cartam regis Edwardi Tertii, de non veniendo ad parliamentum.

Item perquiſivit aliam cartam ejuſdem regis, de non ſolvendo cupam vel palfridum poſt deceſſum alicujus abbatis.

Item dominus rex, & princeps filius ejus, & plures domini regni Anglie cum eo, retenti erant ſub annuâ penc̄oe leporariorum.

Item ipſe ordinavit cantarias conventûs.

Et mutavit uſum nigrarum botarum in nigris caligis cum nigris ſotularibus.

Item, preter hec predicta, multa alia fecit & perquiſivit, ſicut patet perſcrutanti evidentias noſtras.

20. Mem', quòd pulpitum in refectorio, pictura capelle Sc̄e Marie, celatoria totius chori & corporis eccleſie, & depinctio ejuſdem, tabula ſuper altare Sc̄e Marie, crux de argento cum Johanne & Mariâ, pictura Crucifixi, Marie & Johannis, cum multis aliis. Omnia iſta facta fuerunt per fratrem W. Geryn [4].

21. Mem', quòd pauca hìc memorantur de multis bonis đni Philippi abbatis, collata per fratrem W. Charyte.

Primò perquiſivit nobis CCXLV lī. per annum de proventubus prioratûs de Ware, ex dono regis Henrici Quarti, & anno ejuſdem regis primo; & habuimus eas in pacificâ poſſeſſione uſque ad tempus regis Henrici Quinti.

Item perquiſivit nobis cartam de licentiâ perquirendi terras ad valorem C lī. per annum.

Item perquiſivit nobis cartam de quietâ clamatione manſionum canonicorum apud Cokeram, & hoc per magnum laborem & expenſas diverſas.

Item perquiſivit nobis cartam regis Henrici Quarti, de corrodio non habendo in monaſterio noſtro.

Item de fine habito inter nos & dominum de Beamont & priorem de Bermundeſey, pro decimis de Woodhous [5], que materia longo tempore fuit in lite; tamen recuperavit contra eos. Unde perquiſivit cartam regis de confirmatione hujus finis, &c.

Item quomodo finivit materiam inter nos & ep̄m Covent' & Lich' pro Sandholme [6], que fuit materia valdè difficillima, oneroſa, & ſumptuoſa. Indè adquiſivit cartam regis de confirmatione hujus finis, &c.

Item quomodo tranſmutavit cantariam Roberti Byrde de villâ de Quenyboro ad abbathiam Leyc'.

Item perquiſivit nobis cartam regis Henrici Quarti, de confirmatione omnium poſſeſſionum noſtrarum, &c.

Item perquiſivit nobis notabile tranſcriptum bullarum ſummorum pontificum, archiepiſcoporum, & epiſcoporum, de confirmatione omnium poſſeſſionum noſtrarum; valdè notabile eſt. Et, preter hoc, multa alia fecit & perquiſivit, ſicut patet ſcrutanti evidentias noſtras.

Item perquiſivit cartam regis Henrici Quarti, quòd nullus proviſor ſeu captor regis merchatur feodum noſtrum; nec bladum, beſtias, vel cariagia capiat, &c.[1]

22. Mem', quòd hec verba contenta ſunt in indenturâ inter abbatem Leyc' & ejuſdem loci conventum ex unâ parte, & Bartholomeum Brokeſby, &c. ex alterâ parte; ſcilicet, quòd abbas monaſterii predicti qui pro tempore fuerit celebrabit, vel faciet alium canonicum ejuſdem monaſterii, vel honeſtum capellanum ſecularem, ſumptibus ejuſdem monaſterii, celebrare miſſam pro animâ Johanne Beauchamp, ad altare Sc̃i Johannis Baptiſte & beati Auguſtini, ex parte auſtrali ejuſdem monaſterii, vel alibi ſi id ibidem commodò fieri non poterit, orando & mentionem vel memoriam in eâdem miſsâ pro & de animâ dicte Johanne ſpecialitèr & nominatìm faciendo. Concedunt etiam predicti abbas & conventus, quòd iidem canonici admittendi vel profitendi jurabunt ſuper ſancta evangelia quòd dictam celebrationem & memoriam hujuſmodi formâ & modo predictis faciend' pro poſſe ſuo ſuſtentabunt in perpetuum. Et inſuper predicti abbas & conventus concedunt predicto Bartholomeo, &c. cs̃. nomine pene, quandocunque continget dicti abbas & conventus, &c. in celebratione & memoriis, modo & formâ predict', faciend', legitimo impedimento ceſſante, per tres menſes ceſſarent, ut in indenturâ[2].

23. Mem', quòd anno Domini MCCCCLXXXII°, in die Perpetue & Felicitatis, abbas & conventus in domo capitulari convenerunt, & communi aſſenſu & conſenſu ſtatuerunt & ordinari fecerunt, ut cotidie in miſsâ capitulari ſpecialis fiat memoria pro fratre Willo Charyte, pro beneficiis eidem conventui & monaſterio diverſimodè collatis per eundem; ſic quòd celebrans dictam miſſam, ſi de Sanctis aut de Dominicâ fuerit, capiat collectam, "Deus qui caritatis ſub uno p dñm." Si verò pro defunctis celebret, dicta collecta erit ſexta in meridiem, additis iſtis terminis, "famulo tuo." Huic etiam ordinationi addiderunt dicti abbas & conventus quòd idem Wills obitum ſuum ſpecialem cum William Aſton ſingulis annis celebratum cum ſpeciali memoriâ ad Placebo, Dirige, & Miſsâ. Item ordinatum eſt, quòd poſt mortem dicti Willi cotidie ad miſſam capitularem fiet memoria pro ipſo in collectâ, ſcil', "Deus, cùm proprium," additis terminis, "famulo tuo."

Et, ut mentes ſingulorum fratrum ad dictam ordinationem perimplendam excitentur, pauca ejuſdem beneficia, de multis collecta, modò hìc recitantur.

Primò idem Willus contulit XL lĩ. ad perquirend' terras & tenementa ad capellam beate Marie, pro exibicione puerorum & aliorum eodem provenientium eodem die Perpetue & Felicitatis.

Item poſtea emit unum molendinum ventriticum apud Stouton, quod conſtabat XX lĩ. valens per annum XL s̃.

Item emit in eâdem villâ II meſſuagia & II virgatas terre, que conſtabant XIIII lĩ. valent' per annum XVI s̃.

Item emit certas terras & tenementa in Hungarton & Baggrave, que conſtabant VI lĩ. valent' per annum XIII s̃. IIII đ.

Item dedit conventui x libras in communi ciſtâ cuſtodiendas, ut, cum defecerit ſin habitualis ſtipendii ſolutio ex parte celararii vel camerarii, ſolveretur eiſdem de dictâ ſummâ debitis temporibus.

Item contulit c marcas officio celararii, pro catallis emendis ad juſtand' ad paſturas de Ingwarby.

Item contulit x lĩ. officio ſubcelararii, eidem deliberandas cum neceſſe fuerit.

Item dedit terras & tenementa ad valorem per annum x marcarum.

Item dedit calicem de auro, & ymaginem Sc̃e Marie deauratam[3].

24. Mem', quòd frater W. de Malvernâ abbas habuit licentiam communi ſigillo firmatam, quòd, inſtallatione ſuâ habitâ, domus Leyc' tenebatur diverſis creditoribus in ſummâ duarum millium & ſexaginta marcarum, x s̃. VI đ. Dat' die Martis proximâ poſt feſtum Omnium Sanctorum, anno Domini M°CC°XCI[4].

25. Mem' quòd die Annunciationis beate Marie, anno Domini M°CCC°, ſumma ſalſarum in abbathiâ Leyceſtrie argenteorum fuit XXI; ſumma diſcorum argenteorum, XLIII; de quibus dominus abbas habet unum duodenam & VIII ſalſaria; & XXXI diſci & XIII ſalſaria liberati fuerunt ad coquinam[5].

26. Mem', quòd cancella Sc̃i Martini edificata fuit anno Domini M°CCCC°IX°, tempore Ric̃i Rotheley abbatis; & conſtabat XXXIIII lĩ. Et cancella de Cokeram edificata fuit anno Domini M°CCCC°XLII°, tempore domini Johis Pomerey abbatis[6].

27. Nota, quòd iſta verba inveniuntur inter evidentias domini de Aſtley:

"Abbas Leyceſtr' habet manerium de Yngwardby, cum pertinentiis, perquiſit' de Rogero Angervyle, milite. Et tres virgate terre, cum meſſ' in Buſsheby, cum pratis & paſturis, & tres virgate terre, aſſignantur cuidam cantarie ibidem.

"Item dominus de Aſtley habet in Wylloby Waterlays unam virgatam terre vocat' Canteray, & VI denaratos redditûs, cum advocatione eccleſie ejuſdem, dicto manerio pertinent'.

"Item Willus Danet tenet in eâdem de dicto domino 4 virgatas terre, cum v meſſuagiis dicto manerio pertinent', reddendo annuatim dicto domino de Aſteley v đ. & dim' libram piperis; pro quibus dictus đnus de Aſteley faciet ſervicia pro quantitate. Et ſciend', quòd totum predictum manerium tenetur de domino de Grey de Codenor pro uno feodo militis."

Et notandum, quòd 12 virgate terre & 2 denaratus redditûs, cum pertin', in Wylloby Waterleys, cum advocatione eccleſie ejuſdem ville, pertinent manerio de Yngwarby, ſicut patet in cartis noſtris de Yngwarby, & omnibus aliis evidentiis noſtris.

Et notandum, quòd III virgate terre quas habuimus in Buſby vendite fuerunt, ſicut patet in rotul' Johannis de Thorp & Radulfi de Griſley celarariorum, cujus dat' eſt anno Domini MCCCLXXI[7].

28. Pateat univerſis per preſentes, me Johem Grey, dñm de Codenore & de Yngwarby, recepiſſe de đno Willo de Aſteley milite VII s̃. pro relevio terrarum & tenementorum, cum advocatione eccleſie de Wylleby Watles in comitatu Leyc', que quondam fuerunt Radi de Angervyle militis, pro portione unius feodi militis manerii de Yngwarby, quod eſt in manibus abbatis Leyc'; videlicet, VI s̃. VIII đ. pro quintâdecimâ parte unius feodi militis, & IIII đ. ultra, ſecundum conſilium & ordinationem predictorum domini Willi & Abbatis; de quibus quidem predictis VII s̃. fateor me eſſe pacatum, & dictum dominum Willm in formâ predictâ fore quietum per preſentes. In cujus rei teſtimonium, preſentibus ſigillum meum appoſui. Dat' apud Evyngton, die Martis proximâ poſt Clauſum Paſce, anno regni Ricardi II. poſt Conqueſtum IX°.[8]

29. 32. Habemus, ex dono Ricardi de Morvill, conſtabularii regis Scotie, redditum xs̄. ſingulis annis, quem canonici de Drieburk nobis annuatim ad feſtum Sc̄i Michaelis perſolvent in perpetuum pro quâdam terrâ, ſcil', pro dim' carucatâ in Bangelane, quam Alexander de Sc̄o Martino dedit predicto Ricardo in concordiâ pro interfectione Malcolmi de Morvillâ fratris ſui, cujus corpus in cemeterio canonicorum de Leyc' ſepultum eſt.

Mem', quòd cum controverſia orta fuerit inter abbatem & conventum Leyc' & abbatem de Drieburk pro redditu xs̄. per annum, tandem lis ſic conquievit, quòd abbas & conventus de Drieburk perſolvent de cetero abbati & conventui Leyc' vs̄. quos eis aſſignaverunt de redditu ſuo apud Northampton, quos canonici de Sc̄o Jacobo de Northampton canonicis de Leyc' annuatim perſolvent, de redditu xxxiiis̄. iiiid̄. quos canonici de Dryeburk pro eccleſiâ de Boſiat perſolvere tenentur.

Habemus cartam abbatis & conventûs de Dryeburk, directam ad abbatem & conventum de Sc̄o Jacobo de Northampton, pro ſolutione vs̄. annuatim in his verbis: "Univerſitati noſtre notum facimus, quòd ex conventione quâdam inter nos & abbatem & conventum de Leyc' factâ, ſuper dim' carucatâ terre in Bangelane, eidem abbati & conventui vs̄. pro dictâ terrâ ſingulis annis ad Purificationem beate Marie in perpetuum ſolvere tenemur. Quocirca vobis mandamus & ſupplicamus, quatenùs loco noſtro prefatis abbati & conventui Leyc' memorat' vs̄. ad predictum terminum perſolvatis, de redditu quem nobis debetur pro eccleſiâ de Boſyath."

Habuimus modò de priore Sc̄i Andree Northampt' vs̄. annui redditûs, quos ſolebamus recipere de abbate & conventu Sc̄i Jacobi de Northampt'[2].

Mem', quòd canonici de Drieburk conceſſerunt canonicis Sc̄i Jacobi extra Northt' eccleſiam ſuam de Boſyath, &c. reddendo annuatim eis duas marcas & dim'; quas quidem duas marcas & dim' abbas de Drieburk & conventus aſſignaverunt predictis abbati & conventui Sc̄i Jacobi extra Northt' ſolvere annuatim priori & conventui Sc̄i Andree de Northampt'; ſalvâ ex utrâque parte conventione inter eos priùs factâ, ut in conventionibus que ſunt in libro de Chartwary.

33. Habemus capellam de Halſo, ex dono fundatoris noſtri, cùm decimis garbarum & feni, &c. que conſuevit habere capellanum reſidentem per matricem eccleſiam de Brakley. Et ſciendum, quòd inhabitantes dicte hamelette de Halſo tenentur ad reparationem ejuſdem capelle; & nos exoneramur à reparatione ejus, ut patet in concordiâ inter dominum Joh̄em Lovell & abbatem Leyc', apud Northampton, in craſtino Apoſtolorum Petri & Pauli, cujus dat' eſt anno Domini m°ccc° nonageſimo viii°, & regis Ricardi II. xxi°; ubi abbas proteſtatus eſt, pro ſe & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, quòd nec ipſi nec predeceſſores ſui aut ſucceſſores ſui non tenebantur nec tenentur ad reparationes dicte capelle, ex aliquo pacto, vel compoſitione aliquâ, ſeu debito aliquo. Tamen, ad ſpecialem rogatum ejuſdem domini Johannis, cum proteſtatione publicâ, quòd hujuſmodi factum predicti abbatis non procederet in jus aliquid vel clameum dictis inhabitantibus, ſeu in prejudicium dicti abbatis, conceſſit predictus abbas, pro hâc vice tantùm, ſe velle tectum cancelli dicte capelle & feneſtras competenter emendare. Et, pro iſtâ conceſſione, predictus dominus Lovell conceſſit ad predictam reparationem vi bonas arbores quercinas accipiend' in ſilvâ ſuâ de Bagworth, & xls̄. in pecunia, ſicut patet in dictâ concordiâ in Rotulo Pynchebek, que eſt in libro Parliamenti[3].

Rokeby. Habuimus, ex dono Ernoldi de Boſco, advocationem eccleſie de Rokeby, ex confirmatione regis Henrici II. que ſolebat eſſe capella de Clifton, modò tantùm preſentamus nominatum ad epiſcopum. Et habemus homagium & ſervicium de heredibus Henrici de Rokeby. Rector de Rokeby habet totam decimam de eccleſiâ ibidem, & ſolvit xxs̄. pro procuratione.

Mem', quòd cauſa que vertebatur inter Hen' de Rokeby & Paulum abbatem Leyc', in curiâ đni regis, ſuper advocationem eccleſie de Rokeby, hoc modo finita eſt; ſcil', quòd dictus H. juri q̃d ſibi competere aſſerebat renunciavit, & in predictâ curiâ recognovit eam eſſe capellam matricis eccleſie de Clifton, &c.; tamen dictus abbas pro ſe & conventu ſuo conceſſit prenominato Hen' & heredibus ſuis, pro homagio ſuo & ſervicio, ut liceat eis in perpetuum, poſt mortem Simonis decani, clericum eligere, & abbati & conventui preſentare, cui eam concedent, ſi fuerit idoneus, pro xxs̄. annuatim, nomine firme, ipſis ſolvend', &c.; ita quòd predicti H. & heredes ſui plegii erunt de predicto redditu; & clericus qui predictam capellam tenebit ſingulis annis percipiet c^{i}ſma de matrice eccleſiâ.

Mem', quòd anno regni regis Henrici filii regis Johannis v°, facta fuit finalis concordia in curiâ domini regis, apud Coventr', inter Wilłm abbatem Leyc' & Hen' de Rokeby, de advocatione capelle de Rokeby; unde predictus abbas recognovit advocationem predicte capelle eſſe jus ipſius H.; ita quòd idem H. & ejus heredes liberabunt idoneum clericum ipſi abbati & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, quem ipſe abbas & ſucceſſores ſui preſentabunt epiſcopo loci; & qui clericus reddet annuatim abbati & conventui Leyc' antiquam & debitam penſionem quam predicta eccleſia de Leyc' percipere conſuevit. Et pro iſtâ advocatione dedit nobis predictus H. totam terram ſuam quam habuit in villâ de Holmer.

Mem', quòd cauſa annue penſionis xxs̄. verteretur in conſiſtorio epiſcopali Lichf', hecque acta fuit inter abbatem Leyc' & dominum Petrum de Bilneye rectorem eccleſie de Rokeby, &c.: tandem illa annua penſio xxs̄. recuperata fuit per ſententiam diffinitivam & latam coram diverſis judicibus ordinariis, ſicut patet in quibuſdam inſtrumentis publicò ſuper hoc confectis.

Item mem', quòd eadem penſio annua xxs̄. recuperata fuit per placitum in curiâ domini regis à đno Joħe Stone, perſonâ eccleſie parochialis de Rokeby, anno Edwardi regis quarti v°; & in curiâ ep̃i per ſententiam diffinitivam, ut in libro placitorum [3].

Ryton. Decima garbarum & feni pertinet ad eccleſiam de Bulkyngton, ex dono Rogeri de Watervile [4].

Schelton & Anſty, ex dono Rogeri Watervile; que quondam fuerunt capelle de Bulkyngton. Prior de Coventry habet totam decimam; & reddit nobis xs̄. per annum per compoſitionem [5].

Schuckboro. Oſbertus de Lemyngton dedit nobis dim' virgatam terre ibidem, quam nos dedimus Thome, filio Oliveri de Schuckboro. Redd' nobis annuatim ixs̄. liberè [6].

Sowe. Habemus ibi viſum franciplegii, ſicut patet in inquiſitione factâ per regem; & debet ſectam. Reddebat iis̄. modò viiiđ. [7]

Habemus in Stokyngforth, ex dono Wilłi de Novo Mercato, & ex confirmatione regis Henrici II. cum aſſenſu Roberti comitis Leyc', locum de Stokyngforth, cum totâ illâ terrâ quam predictus Robertus comes dedit ei in eſcambium pro Wytewyck.

Habemus in Stokyngforth, ex dono Gaufridi de Turvillâ, capellam de Stokyngforth, & quicquid Gaufridus heremita de feodo ſuo, tam in boſco quàm in plano, &c. à magno boſco ſuo uſque ad dimnetum ex parte aquilonari, & ex aliâ parte per magnam viam uſque ad diviſam terre Hugonis de Hardreſhull, &c. [8]

Stephanus de Segrave dedit nobis ibidem boſcum de Newhay; & redd' per annum xiiis̄. iiiiđ.

Modò dedimus priori de Erdbury locum de Stokyngforth, cum boſco de Newhay.

Mem', quòd eodem die & anno Ricardus abbas Leyc' & ejuſdem loci conventus conceſſerunt per cartam, &c. Wilło Botillar, Wilło Babyngton, Thome Warner, & Joħi Catby, qui ſtatum habuerunt in manerio de Stokyngforth, quòd ipſi dare, concedere, & aſſignare, poterint Joħi priori de Erdbury, &c. predictum manerium, cum pertin'; ſalvis abbati & conventui de Leyc' fidelitate & ſecuritate de lxiiis̄. iiiiđ. nomine relevii.

Shelton reddebat unam libram piperis; modò ii libras.

Weſton. Decima garbarum, feni, & boſci, pertinet ad eccleſiam de Bulkyngton, ex dono Rogeri Watervile.

Wovere. Ernoldus primus de Boſco dedit nobis capellam de Wovere, cum decimis garbarum & feni, cum unâ virgatâ terre & i meſſuagio, pertinent' ad matricem eccleſiam de Clyfton.

Reddebat xxis̄.; modò reddit cum firmâ.

Decima reddebat xiiiilī.; modò viiilī.

Mem', quòd capella de Brownſwovre eſt dependens matrici eccleſie de Clifton, & non eſt eccleſia parochialis per ſe. Eſt tamen ibidem ſepultura & baptiſterium; & hoc conceſſum fuit ſpecialitèr per abbatem Leyc' propter locorum diſtanciam, & fluvii de Avene diſcrimina, &c. ut in inquiſitione [9].

Wybtoft. Rađus Araby dedit nobis in Wybtoft vii meſſuagia, x crofta, v virgatas terre & dim', i molendinum.

Omnes tenentes noſtri de Wybtoft debent venire ad viſum franc' noſtrum de Bulkyngton, & ſolvere ad communem fyn. Si aliquis tenens ibi receſſerit vel obierit, dabit domino abbati unam hariotam. Omnes debent ſolvere ingreſſum domino abbati ſicut quod poſſint finire cum ipſo.

Habemus ibi weyfe & ſtreyfe, &c.

Habemus ibi viſum franciplegii, ſicut patet in le Chartwary per inquiſitionem factam per regem.—Reddebat vilī. xviis̄. viiiđ.; modò reddit iiiilī. xiiiis̄. [10]

Wyginhull juxta Crudworth. Mem', quòd cum lis eſſet mota inter abbatem Leyc' & rectorem de Sutton pro certis decimis provenientibus de ix virgatis terre in Wyginhull, quarum ſex ſunt de feodo com' de Warewyck ad eccleſiam de Sutton pertin', & tres ſunt de feodo Thome de Ardenâ ad eccleſiam de Crudworth pertin'; &, quia difficilis fuit ſeparatio feodorum; tandem judices, auctoritate apoſtolicâ, pronunciaverunt duas partes garbarum predictarum novem virgatarum eccleſie de Sutton ſolvi debere, tertiam partem eccleſie de Crudworth.

Statuerunt inſuper, ut manentes in ſex virgatis terre de feodo com' Warw' viſitent matricem eccleſiam de Sutton in die Aſſumptionis beate Marie & Paſche, & ibidem eodem die communicent, & confeſſiones in Quadrageſimâ & in extremis à capellano de Sutton recipiant, & mortui ibidem ſepeliantur, & omnes minutas decimas omni tempore eidem eccleſie perſolvent. Et quia remoti ſunt à matrice eccleſiâ, nec ſine gravi detrimento aſſiduè eam adire poſſunt, omnes alias obventiones & oblationes à predictis hominibus provenientes capellanus in eccleſiâ de Crudworth miniſtrens percipiet, qui ipſis ſpiritualia miniſtret in eccleſiâ de Crudworth, cùm opus fuerit.

Item capellanus de Sutton iiiđ. die Paſche ſolvat eccleſie de Crudworth ad thus emend'. Omnes quidem manentes in tribus virgatis de feodo Thome de Ardenâ in omnibus obventionibus & oblationibus matrici eccleſie de Crudworth reſpondebant, &c. [11]

49. "Habemus in Evyngton eccleſiam & rectoriam in proprios uſus, cum decimis garbarum & feni, &c. ex dono Arnoldi de Boſco & Jordani de Humeth, & ex confirmatione regis Henrici II. ut patet in matriculo, in hiis verbis:

'Eccleſie de Evyngton patronus abbas Leyc', habens eam in proprios uſus ex conceſſione H. nunc ep̃i Linc'. Vicarius Wiłłus capellanus, inſtitutus, &c. percipiens nomine vicarie ſue omnes proventus altaris & redditum terre pertinentes ad eccleſiam, & decimam bladi de unâ carucatâ terre. Monachi Sc̃i Ebrulfi percipiunt duas partes decimarum garbarum [ſcil', de IIII acris terre, ſicut patet in extentis manerii de Evyngton], ex dono Joħis de Humet;' unde ſolvimus ei annuatim XLVI s̃. VIII đ."

Decima garbarum reddebat XVII lĩ. modò IIII lĩ. X s̃.

Habemus ibidem, pro decimâ feni de villatâ de Evyngton, X s̃. per annum; ſcil', de quâlibet virgatâ terre VI đ.

Summa virgatarum terre XX; ſumma denariorum X s̃.

Mem', quòd ſolebamus habere XX s̃. per annum, & decimas paſture trium clauſarum in campis ibidem; quarum una modò eſt in tenurâ Petri Yrmõgyar de Leyc'; & redd' đno de Grey V lĩ; nobis pro decimâ VI s̃. VIII đ. & vicario III s̃. IIII đ. Alia eſt in tenurâ Roberti Schedingham; & redd' đno IIII lĩ. & nobis pro decimâ nil. Alia eſt in tenurâ Ric̃i Watts; & reddit đno LX s̃. & nobis pro decimâ nil. Ideò conſulendum eſt cum conſilio dicti abbatis.

Habemus ibidem decimam molendini ventritici & aquatici đni Grey de Evyngton.

Habemus ibidem IIII s̃. per annum, homagium & relevium, de heredibus Ricardi Hotoft de Humberſton, pro unâ virgatâ terre & quâdam parte tofti, quas nos dedimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, Alano de Lindiſeiâ pro homagio & ſervicio ſuo, quondam in tenurâ Joħis Evyngton, poſtea Radulphi Braſyar de Leyc'. Et dicta placea tofti extendit ſe à toſto quod fuit Rogeri Wolf in longitudine XII perticas uſque orientem, & in latitudine octo perticas.

Mem', quòd abbas & conventus Leyc' conceſſerunt Joħi de Humet & heredibus, quòd clericum ydoneum quem nobis preſentabunt in fratrem & canonicum recipiemus.

Habemus, de domino de Evyngton, pro decimâ dominicarum pratorum ſuorum, IIII pecias prati, videlicet, inter parcum & villam de Evyngton ex parte boreali gurgitis ibidem; & II pecias prati ex parte auſtrali dicti gurgitis inter parcum & villam predict'; IIII pecias prati ex parte occidentali parci ab Evyngton inter parcum & Leyceſtr' ex parte boreali dicti gurgitis.

Item habemus in perpetuum unam placeam prati ex parte orientali gurgitis vocati Evyngton-brook, que quidem placea prati vocatur Jenkynnes Paſture, que quidem paſtura tenebit in latitudine in fine auſtrali juxta gutturam uſque borealem VIII perticas, quarum quelibet pertica tenebit in certo VIII pedes in ſtandardum; que quidem paſtura aſſignatur abbati & ſucceſſoribus ſuis in perpetuum pro decimâ pratorum predicti Johannis de Evyngton.

Item habemus de đno Grey de Evyngton in perpetuum XXII perticatas, quarum quelibet pertica continet VIII pedes; apud Gondonſty VI perticas inſimul jacentes, & III perticas inſimul jacentes, & alias III perticas inſimul in le Netherſty, & IIII perticas apud Golbdonſty-ford ex utrâque parte le forth, & II perticas abutt' ſuper eandem forth, IIII perticas in le Hetherſty deſuper vallum predictum.

Mem', quòd cùm queſtio vertebatur inter abbatem Leyc' & W. vicarium de Evyngton, ſuper decimis provenientibus de molendino de eâdem, lis in hoc modum conquievit, videlicet, quòd dominus W. vicarius renunciaverit in jure coram prioribus de Nehnham & Caldewell, & decano Bedford', omni juri ſuo, ſi quod habuerit, vel habere potuit, pro capiend' decimas de dicto molendino, &c.[1]

50. Eccleſie de Foxton patronus prior de Daventr'. Habemus eam in proprios uſus, ſicut patet in matriculo epiſcopi.

Habemus in Foxton II bovatas terre ex dono Roberti Cotes & Helewyſe uxoris ejus, & ex confirmatione regis Henrici II.

Inde dedimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, Rogero filio Ade de Foxton, & heredibus ſuis, pro homagio & ſervicio ſuo, unam dimidiam bovatam terre, excepto toſto, reddendo nobis annuatim XVIII đ. Sed utrùm feoffavimus aliquem vel aliquos in alterâ bovatâ & dimidiâ predict', non habemus in ſcriptis. Et apparet per Rentalia, quòd quidam Ada de Sadyngton & Rogerus Heron habuerunt feoffamenta ñra, quòd multis annis occupaverint dict' bovatam & dimidiam terre, reddend' nobis III s̃. per annum; & quo titulo occupaverint jam neſcimus.

[14] He was a native of France, and ſtudied the civil law and divinity; was invited to England by Henry II. who made him his ſecretary, in which office he was continued under queen Eleanor and Richard I.; he was made archdeacon of Bath about 1175; archdeacon of London 1198, archdeacon of Canterbury, dean of Wolverhampton, prebendary of Sarum and St. Paul's. He died after 1205, and was buried at Bath. His works were printed at Mentz in 1603 in quarto; Cologne, 1618, folio; and with an appendix, 1624, octavo; Paris, 1677. 1519; his continuation of Ingulfus' Hiſtory, Ox. 1684, folio; a Chronicle of Peterborough in heroic verſe, at the deſire of Henry abbot of Croyland, MS. Cotton Claud. A. V; "Carmen de ſtellâ magos ducente", in Leonine verſe, MS. Bodl. Laud B. 163. "Duæ epiſtolæ ad Henricum II. Angliæ regem," Bibl. Bodl. 643; "de amicitiâ & charitate," ib. 1343; "epiſtolæ," ib. 2017. 2009. 2671; "de vitâ S. Job," ib. 2025; "Commentarium ſuper Job," ib. 2206; "lectiones ſuper Job," ib 2302. 2327; "Compendium libri Job, cui præfixa eſt epiſtola ad Henricum II." ib. 2323; "de utilitatibus tribulationis," ib. 2689. He is ſaid to have firſt uſed the term tranſubſtantiation. Tanner, Bib. Brit. p. 105. Of the writings of Peter of Blois there is a copious detail in Dupin, XII Cent. pp. 158—166. The concluding paragraph gives an account of the different editions of his works.

[15] Or de Aurelis, or de Aureolo; by whom there is in the Bodleian Library, 2231, a tract "de decem præceptis" at Baliol college; "ſuper duos libros ſententiarum," at Merton, 480. 579. 710; "Compendium literalis ſenſus Sanctæ Scripturæ" at New college, 978; "Augment. omnium librorum totius Sanctæ Scripturæ" at Bene't college, Cambridge, 1517; "Epitome totius bibliæ."

[16] Born in Lombardy, biſhop of Paris 1160, died 1164, called "Maſter of the Sentences" from four books of Sentences written by him. A long account of Peter Lombard in Dupin, XII Cent. p. 191. & ſeqq.

[17] Chancellor of the Univerſity of Paris, died 1198; a ſcholaſtic writer. Petrus Comeſtor, Claudius, E. I. 17. "Explanatio Viſionum Danielis ad literam, ſecundùm Magiſtrum Petrum Comeſtorem;" 18. "Verbum abbreviatum Magiſtri Petri, primùm cantoris Pariſienſis, poſtea novitii Longipontii, in quo novitius ſepultus eſt." Noticed by Dupin, XII Cent. p. 176.

[1] Remigii "expoſitio nominum Hebraicorum." Bibl. Bodl. 1573. 2228. 3497. Dupin, IX Cent. p. 174, notices Remigius, a monk of St. Germans of Auxerre, as being very learned in profane ſciences, but who employed himſelf more profitably in expounding the Scriptures.

[2] Petrus Alphonſus, a Spaniſh Jew, who formerly bore the name of Moſes. Dupin, XII Cent. p. 170. Royal MSS. 15 C. II. 9. "Petri Alphonſi Dialogus contra Judæos." "Petri Alphonſus Judaiſmus ſive Dialogus de capitibus Chriſtianæ religionis contra Judæos & Saracenos, inter Petrum tunc converſum ad religionem Chriſtianam & quendam Moyſen. Illum de ſacro fonte levavit Alphonſus, rex Hiſpaniæ, die natali S. Petri, anno C. 1106; unde illi utrumque nomen. Otho A. XV. 2. Bodl. 1353.

[3] Qu. Tho. Aquinas.

[4] Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; and archbiſhop of Canterbury. Bibliotheca Britannica, p. 120. His great work was "De Cauſâ Dei," againſt Pelagius.

[5] Henricus Gandavus wrote "Summa" & "Quodlibeta," Balliol, 186, 187; Oriel, 883; "Quæſtiones" & "Summa quæſtionum theologicarum," Baliol, 574—5. Henry Goethals, commonly called Henry of Gaunt, archdeacon of Tournay. Dupin, XIII Cent. p. 75; who notices his "Sum of Divinity" and "Quodlibetick Queſtions".

[6] Richardus Armachanus was a native of Ireland, fellow of Baliol College, and chancellor of Oxford; primate of Ireland; and a controverſial writer in the fourteenth century. Wood's Hiſt. vol. III. p. 54. 85. App. 21. Annals, vol. I. 405. Richard Fitz-Ralph, arch-biſhop of Armagh. Dupin, XIV Cent. pp. 70, 71 118.

[7] William Wodeford was an Iriſh Franciſcan, who wrote againſt Wicliffe. Bibliotheca Britannica, p. 784. MS. Bodl. 3629. Cat. MSS Angl. Leland ſaw in the library of Queen's College, Cambridge, "Defenſorium Gul. Wodeford contra Armachanum." His comment on Boetius is in Bibl. Bodl. 2150.

[8] A Yorkſhire man and Auguſtine monk, who alſo wrote againſt Wicliffe; and was by Richard II. made archbiſhop of Dublin, as was his brother Robert, and alſo archbiſhop of York. Bibliotheca Britannica, p. 745.

[9] Ægidius Romanus, or Giles of Rome, archbiſhop of Bourges. Dupin, XIV Cent. p. 54. He was a native of Rome, a pupil of Thomas Aquinas, eminent among the ſchoolmen by the name of Doctor fundatiſſimus (which we may tranſlate the well-bottomed Doctor); and an archbiſhop, flouriſhed about the year 1280, and wrote a Latin tract in three books "de regimine principum," or the art of government, for the uſe of Philip le Hardi, ſon of Louis king of France, early tranſlated into Hebrew, French, Italian, and Engliſh; and printed at Rome, 1482; and at Venice, 1498. An Oxonian. Annals, 210.

[10] "Verbum abbreviatum Magiſtri Petri, primùm cantoris Pariſienſis, poſtea novitii Longipontis," is among Dr. James's MSS. at Oxford. Cat. MSS. Angl. pars I. p. 260. a. See note (16), p. 101.

[11] Nicholas Trivet was a great writer of divinity, as well as of Engliſh Hiſtory; but, as to theſe pieces, "expoſ' ſuper rem Angeli," and "Meditat. ſuper Rem Anglic'," probably one and the ſame treatiſe, whatever be the ſubject, no work of either denomination is mentioned by Tanner, ibid. p. 722; perhaps it was part of his book "de Officio Miſſæ," or ſome other theological work. Qu. if it does mean his "flores ſuper regulam beati Auguſtini," Bibl. Bodl. Cat. MSS. Angl. 3609?

[12] Hildebert, archbiſhop of Tours, noticed by Moſheim, XI Cent. ch. II. near the end; 8° edit. vol. II. p. 316. He was a theological writer. He is called in the Oxford and Cambridge MS Catalogues "epiſcopus Cenomanenſis."

[13] A Jew, converted to a Franciſcan, and a great gloſſator, died in 1349.

[14] Biſhop of Liſieux, author of a Chronicle in two parts. To him Rabanus Maurus inſcribed his Comments on Geneſis.

[15] Alba is a word of the lower empire for pearls; and may here ſignify, that theſe books were emboſſed with precious ſtones? but then what is ſub alba? or have theſe terms any relation to the colour of the binding? (Perhaps, however, alba and ſub-alba may not have any reference to the books or manuſcripts; and may mean that the donors of theſe manuſcripts preſented alſo, the one a veſtment called the alba, and the other ſub-alba. S. D.) Frumenteyn and Ybeſtoke were probably canons of the houſe. Ibſtock is the name of a town in this county; and Robert Furmenteyn was abbot here in 1244.

[16] A native of Ibſtock.

[17] See notes (3) and (31), p. 105.

[18] Dares Phrygius, the well-known fictitious writer of the Trojan war.

[19] See before, p. 101, note (17). He wrote "Hiſtoria Scholaſtica," abridged by W. Hunter, an Engliſhman.

[20] Rabanus Maurus, archbiſhop of Mentz in the ninth century, died in 856, a voluminous commentator on the Bible, and theological writer.

[21] A well-known monkiſh fiction.

[22] Qu Clement, monk of Lanthoni? though no ſuch title appears among his works, Tanner, Bibliotheca Britannica, 183; nor the Penitentiale hereafter mentioned.

[23] Qu. Monumuthenſis?

[24] Petrus Alphonſus wrote "de lege Chriſtianâ, Judaicâ, & Saracenorum, per modum dialogi." Bibl. Bodl MS. Laud. Cat. MSS. Angl. 1353; and other pieces againſt the Jews. Ib. 2659.

[25] Under the title of Carolus Magnus, in the MS libraries, is the Life of Charlemagne by Eginhard; Bibl. Bodl. 837. 1302; beſides French or Romance lives of him.

[26] Moſt probably Knighton's.

[27] Qu the ſame as Dares Phrygius, whoſe hiſtory of the Trojan war has been abſurdly aſcribed to Cornelius Nepos?

[28] For ornamentis we ſhould read originibus, which is the title of ſome copies of Juſtin, the abbreviator of Trogus Pompeius.

[29] It is not unlikely Ovid's books of Metamorphoſes are referred to in this article. Mirabilia mundi was a common title among the monkiſh plagiaries.

[30] Guido de Colonnâ was a Sicilian in the ſuite of Edward I. when he returned from the Croiſade, and wrote a Chronicle. He lived, ſays Mr. Warton, (Hiſtory of Engliſh Poetry, II. 90.) when the mode of fabling by blending Gothic extravagances in Grecian ſtory was at its height, and gave romantic additions to the plain and credible facts invented by Dictys and Dares, who, by miſrepreſenting or enlarging Homer, falſified the Trojan Story. Lydgate tranſlated into Engliſh verſe, and Gower copied largely from, Colonna's "Hiſtoria Trojana," which was printed at Oxford, 1480, 4to, and at Straſburgh, 1486, and 1489.

[31] Alanus de Inſulis wrote "de planctu naturæ contra ſodomiæ vitium." Tanner, Bibliotheca Britannica, p. 16.

[32] No ſuch Chronicler mentioned by Tanner.

[33] Qu. Martinus Polonus, who wrote a chronicle, and died in 1279? Martinus in Chronicis, Tiberius A. VIII. 1. "Chronica Martini, domini papæ pœnitentiarii & capellani, de geſtis ſummorum pontificum & imperatorum;" alſo Caligula A. XVI. and Galba E. XI.; Fauſtina B. II.; 4. "cum continuatione A. D. 1391."

[34] Giraldus Cambrenſis, enumerating this in the Catalogue of his works in Wharton's Angl. Sac. II. 446, ſays of it: "toties promiſſus, fere inter primos inchoatus, inter ultimos autem propalatus, diu nimium clauſus & ſopitus quando tute prodire poſſit plurimis annorum curriculis tempus expectans liberalitèr quidem & non lividè legenti labor ſua quoque laude non indignus." Yet I do not find it mentioned in Tanner.

[35] Ranulphus Higdenus Ceſtrenſis, author of a chronicle printed among Gale's Hiſt. Angl. Scriptores, Ox. 1696.

[36] Chronicon tripartitum Ric. II. lib. 3. Tanner, Bibliotheca Britannica, p. 336. His "Confeſſio amantis," the only one of his three great works which has yet been printed, is pronounced by Mr. Warton, II. 9, "no unpleaſing miſcellany of thoſe ſhorter tales which delighted the readers of the middle age," and ſeems to have been borrowed from the Chronicle of Godfrey of Viterbo. It commences with the creation of the world, and is brought down to the year 1186.

[3] Ariſtotle moſt famous philoſofre
His epiſtles to Alexander ſent.

Occleve's MS. tranſlation of Caſulis' "liber moralis de ludo ſcaccorum." It is pretended by myſtic writers, that Ariſtotle in his old age reviewed his books, and digeſted his philoſophy into one ſyſtem, or body, which he ſent in the form of an epiſtle to Alexander. This ſuppoſititious tract goes alſo by the name of "Secretum Secretorum," and was in part tranſlated by Lydgate. Warton, II. 9. 41.

[4] Tanner notices "Brunyordus Gulielmus, Dominicanus, qui ſcripſit Summam Theologiæ," Bibl. Britan. p. 132.

[5] Bartholomew Glanville was a Franciſcan frier of Suffolk. His principal work is "de proprietatibus rerum," in nineteen books, compiled from Ariſtotle, Plautus, and Pliny, and frequently printed in Germany. Tanner, Bibl. Britan. p. 326. Whether he was author of a "Penitenciale," I have not found.

[6] This piece does not occur in any of the MS libraries.

[7] He was anſwered by archbiſhop Peckham "de paupertate Chriſti." Tanner, Bibl. Britan. p. 585. k.

[11] Tanner, Bibliotheca Britannnica, p. 93, mentions his "Rationale de divinis officiis."

[12] Clemens Lantonienſis' "explanatio ſuper alas Cherubin & Seraphin." Bodl. Cat. Ib. 2312, "Collectarium. Ib. 2333, "a book made of the four Goſpelles by Clemens, a prieſt of the church of Lantony, in twelve parts;" "Concordia Evangeliſtarum" in 12 books; "Commentaria in quatuor Evangelia," in four books. Ib. 2553. He is called prior in an eſſay on the Cherubim's wings. Ib. 3650, "venerabilis prior Lantoniæ, nomine Clemens & opere, vir ſingularis religionis & elimatæ ſcientiæ, præclarus in ſuo luxit tempore inter illuſtres viros Angliæ." Leland, Collect. I. p. 278. He retired from Lanthony in Glouceſterſhire to Lantoney in Wales, that he might purſue his favourite ſtudies with leſs interruption, and died of a paralytic ſtroke. Ib. II. 89. Tanner, Bibl. Britan. p. 185.

[13] Qu. Brixienſis, who commented on the Decretals, &c.

[14] Qu, de Pennaforte, chaplain to Pope Gregory IX, another commentator on the Decretals.

[15] Robert Holkott, a celebrated Dominican of Northampton, who died of the plague in 1399. Bibl. Britan. p. 407. Bibl. Bodl. 2241.

[16] Jacobus Januenſis wrote an "opus quadrageſimale" on the Goſpels. MS. Bodl. 2693. Qu. if this was a commentator thereon? "Tabula Januenſis in ſacram Scripturam." Publ. lib. Camb. 2188.

[17] See before, note (6), p. 102. His ſermons are in the Bodleian library, 1926; and, among them, thirteen, "quorum primus factus eſt ad populum in aulâ epiſcopi Londinienſis, 1356, quarta Dominica adventûs." Harl. MS. 1900. "Sermo domini archiepiſcopi Armachani Anglicè;" fol. 6. ſee a long account of it. He lived in 1357.

[18] In the library of Mr. Theyer (Cat. MSS. Angl. 6489.) are "Petri Babionis ſermones 70;" and, 6491, "Sermones aliquot Babionis;" and, 6534, "73 ſermones plerique per Babionem."

[29] Ricardus de Bury, biſhop of Durham in 1333, firſt founder of a public library at Oxford in his college called Durham college. Brit. Top. II. 120. See Gutch's Annals, vol. II. pars 2. p. 910. Sermons are not among his writings in Tanner, p. 57.

[30] A Franciſcan of Reading. Bibl. Britan. p. 469.

[31] Alredus Rievallenſis wrote ſeveral theological works, &c. "de amicitiâ ſpirituali de vinculo perfectionis," &c.; and may have written "de caritate" alſo. St. Ælred, or St. Æthelred, abbot of Reveſby. Dupin, XII Cent. 173. Among his works is noticed a treatiſe, called "The Mirror of Charity," divided into three books; with an abridgement of that treatiſe. Biſhop Tanner, however, aſcribes "de vinculo perfectionis" to Ælred abbot of Wardon in Bedfordſhire. Bibl. Britan. p. 267.

[7] Probably William de Montibus, cancellarius Lincolniæ. See note (8), p. 101.

[8] I do not find theſe Proverbs mentioned in Bibl. Britan. Are they the rhymes which are noticed by Lord Orford among the Royal and Noble Authors? Hoveden charges him with begging rhymes of the French poets.

[9] In Bibl. Bodl. 2004. are "Quirini ſapientis verba. Huc pertinet narratio de duobus negotiatoribus."

[10] In the Bodleian Library (50) are "Secundi Philoſophi Sententiæ ad Hadriannum," Greek, 1748; "Secundi philoſophi Sententiæ Lat." 2067. "De Secundo philoſopho, qui omni tempore ſilentium ſervavit. Interrogata Adriani ad eundem, ejuſque reſponſio: vocantur autem Secundi problemata."

[13] Papias was a grammarian, who wrote a Latin Dictionary in alphabetical order.

[14] Gul. Brito, a Franciſcan, who died in 1356, wrote a Lexicon, or Vocabulary, of the Bible, which Leland ſays was common in the univerſity. Archbiſhop Peckham in the ordinance of Merton College, Oxford, directs to be found "libros Papie & Hugu*li*onis cum Summa Britonis." Tanner, Bibl. Britan. p. 128.

[15] Johannes Garlandius, an eminent grammarian and poet in the eleventh century. Bibl. Brit. p. 309.

[16] Alexander Grammaticus occurs in the library at Durham. He wrote thirty-four volumes of various works, and was reckoned a very ſkilful man in imitating Hoffman.

[17] A work grounded on a poem "de moribus" by Cato, cited by Aulus Gellius, xi. 2. but written between the reign of Nero and Valentianus III. Whoever was the author, this metrical ſyſtem of ethics had attained the higheſt degree of eſtimation in the barbarous ages. Warton, II, 166, 167.

[18] Qu. the commentator on Epictetus?

[19] See before, note (6), p. 103.

[20] David Boyſus occurs in Bibl. Britan. p. 118; but no ſuch work is attributed to him as "De modo ſignandi." It is more probable that Boethius is here meant.

[21] Qu. Remigius, biſhop of Lyons in the ſixth century, a commentator on the Bible? "Remigii expoſitio in artem primam Donati." Bibl. Bodl. 3582. "Donatus cum expoſitione Remigii", Caius college library Camb. 1045. "Remigius ſuper Phocam grammaticum." Bibl. Theyer, 6389. See note (1), p. 102.

[22] Qu. Ludolphus, a Carthuſian, and a theological writer in the fourteenth century.

[23] "Joannis Gualenſis Floriloquium & communiloquium." Bibl. Theyer, 6383. "Floriloquium philoſophorum Jo. Walenſis," Corpus Chriſti College, Cambridge, 1563; "Manipulus florum quem inchoavit Jo. Gualenſis, qui floruit 1260;" Peterhouſe 1745. Tanner, Bibl. Britan. 749, gives no Thomas Waleys, but John. Qu. ſhould we for Colores read Flores, or Collationes, as his "Summa Collationum" is in Bibl. Bodl. 2684.

[24] Precentor of Canterbury, a very learned man in times of great ignorance in the eleventh century. Among other writings, is one "de vocum conſonantiis." Tanner, Bibl. Britan. p. 563.

[25] "Excerpta è Priſciano ordine alphabetico, juxta expoſitionem Petri Heliæ;" Bibl. Bodl. 2088. "P. H. ſuper Priſcian.;" "Quæſtiones P. H. de conſtructionibus;" Trinity College, 1041-2. "De ſpeciebus conſtructionis;" Merton, 776.

[26] Qu. Robert Kylwardby, archbiſhop of Canterbury, who wrote ſome grammatical pieces? Bibl. Britan. p. 455. "Rob. Kylwardeby ſuper libros Priſciani de Conſtructione;" Merton, 768. He ſtudied at Oxford. Gutch's Annals, vol. I. 212. 221. 305.

[27] In Aſhmole's Muſeum are two copies of "Proverbia Alexandri, Pamphilii, Getæ, Claudiani Magni, Perſii, Ovidii, Virgilii," and other poets. Whether theſe are grammatical or other extracts may be doubted. "Liber Claudiani" occurs in the catalogue of Peterhouſe, 1687. "Claudianus minor" among Iſ. Voſſius' MSS. 2664. may be oppoſed to "Claudius magnus" in our poetical article.

[28] Of him ſee Bibl. Brit. p. 376.

[29] Galfridus Anglicus is Galfridus de Vineſalvo, or Vineſauf, who wrote "de arte dicendi, de novâ poetriâ, de loquendi artificio, de modo & arte dictandi," on the culture of trees and keeping of fruits, and the expedition of Richard I. into the Holy Land; which laſt was printed in the "Geſta Dei per Francos, and in Gale's "Hiſt. Angl. Scriptores, Ox. 1687. II. 247. Tanner, Bibl. Britan. 736.

[30] Alanus, bp. of Autun, and Alanus de Lynne & de Theokeſbury, were theological writers; but not mentioned as poets.

[31] Fulgentius Planciades was a writer of mythology.

[32] Socrates "de morte contemnendâ" is a Latin MS. Bodl. 4054. When Socrates is reckoned among poets who may not be?

[33] See before, note (29).

[34] Richard Feribrige was a ſophiſt of Oxford about 1360; author of "Conſequentiarum regulæ," publiſhed with notes by Alexander Sermoneta, Matthew Campagna, and Gaetano de Tierni, Venice, 1511, 4to. Tanner, Bibl. Brit. p. 278.

[35] At Merton, 605, "Quodlibeta Tho. Sutton."

[12] Hippocrates.

[13] In Dr. Pegge's enumeration of biſhop Groſſeteſte's publiſhed works, p. 279, is one "de impreſſione aëris;" Leland (Collect. III. 21.) ſaw in the library at Peterhouſe, Cambridge, "Lincolnienſis de impreſſionibus aëris;" and in the liſt of inedited works is another tract with a like title, a different piece from the printed one, which in another place is called "de aëris intemperantia prognoſtica." This laſt is probably meant in this Catalogue. See Annals, ut ſupra, 406.

[14] A famous Arabic aſtronomer and commentator on Galen in the eleventh century which produced ſo many celebrated Arabian phyſicians. Haly, called Abbas, was likewiſe an eminent phyſician of this period, and called Galen's Ape. Warton, I. 440. His treatiſe on Judicial Aſtronomy is among ſir H. Saville's MSS. Bibl. Bodl. His comment on Ptolomy's Quadripartitum, Digby, 1715.

[15] "Ars Judiciaria ſecundùm 9 Judices; Alkindum, Zaelem, Albumazar, Meſſehalla, Dorotheum, Jergem, Ariſtotelem, Abennaret, Homar." MS. Savile. More by Zael, Bodl. 561. 1795. 2354. "Introductorium," Aſhmole, 6721.—Zahel, or Zael, or Zeel Bebiz, was an Arabian writer, who diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his writings, "de temporum ſignificationibus in judiciis," & "de electionibus," publiſhed by Nicholas Pruenel with Firmicus and others at Baſle, 1533. Hofman.

[16] Triſmegiſtus, the myſtic philoſopher, whoſe ſpurious writings occur in monaſtic libraries.

[17] The like obſervation applies to this philoſopher.

[18] Meſſehalla "de nativitatibus." MS. Saville, Bibl. Bodl. "Theoria," Aſhm. 6734. Sir Thomas Browne (Vulgar Errors, Book IV. c. 12.) of the difference of dating the climacterical year ſays, "Haly, Meſſahalaeb, Ganivetus, & Guido Bonatus, begin it ab horâ quæſtionis." Arzahel Meſſalak, whoſe works were printed at Venice 1493, flouriſhed about 1080 in Spain, and wrote about the obliquity of the Zodiac, in which he remarks that the greateſt declination of the Sun in his time was 23.34 degrees. Hofman.

[19] Thebit, "de proportionibus;"—"de figurâ Catha;"—"Tractatus patris." See Leland, Coll. IV. 35. "Thebit filii Corred in motum acceſſionis & receſſionis." MS Saville.

[20] William Rede, or Reade, was a very learned fellow of Merton College, Oxford, where he built and furniſhed the library; on the wall of which was painted his portrait; and many of his mathematical inſtruments were preſerved there, when Harriſon wrote his Deſcription of Britain, prefixed to Holinſhed's Chronicle. His "aſtronomical tables," calculated for the meridian of Oxford, were followed by others for that of Cambridge by John Holbrook; but he wrote alſo on divinity-ſubjects, and was promoted in 1369 to the ſee of Chicheſter, where he died in 1375; and was buried before the high altar of his cathedral at Selſey. Tanner, Bibl. Britan. p. 618. Leland mentions another member of Merton, who wrote a medical tract, which, ſays he, "neſcio quid magiæ ſpirabat." Tanner, Bibl. Britan. v. Gladeſaunt. Phyſic and Aſtrology went together.

[21] Stellarium. Qu. a Catalogue of the then-diſcovered ſtars? or a Map repreſenting their relative poſitions in the ſky, and the courſes of the planets? In Bibliotheca Britannica, article Botonerius, p. 115, "Verificacio omnium Stellarum fixarum pro anno MCCCCXL. Hunc ille libellum, inſtante Falſtafio, contexuit—varia Aſtronomica, &c.; ſcilicet, ſtellas verificatas pro anno Chriſti MCCCCXL, ad inſtanciam Johannis Falſtoff; & duas tabulas de ſtellis fixis."

[22] To the calendars in our books of Common Prayer is almoſt always annexed a table, either for finding, or explicitly denoting, the dominical letter for a certain number of years; and ſuch a table, as it is believed, was generally prefixed to the antient liturgies and miſſals, as alſo to old almanacks; and theſe were of different colours, agreeably to the taſte of the illuminator. In ſome old almanacks and diaries, which Mr. Gough poſſeſſes, are theſe coloured tables.

[23] This was written by John Gatiſden, or Gaddeſden, fellow of Merton College, about 1320, the moſt celebrated phyſician of his age in England. This his principal work, divided into five books, was printed at Paris, 1492. Leland calls it "opus luculentum juxta ac eruditum." Tanner, Bibl. Britan. p. 312. Warton, I. 443. Freind and Aikin's Hiſtory of Phyſic. "Roſa Medicinæ," Bibl. Bodl. 2059. 2463. 3619. His "Hiſtoria aurea," ib. 2469.

[24] Neither Bokkedene nor Bokedene occur in Bibliotheca Britannica. His library was purchaſed for Leiceſter abbey.

[6] "Conſtantinus Afer, a monk of Caſſino in Italy, was one of the Saracen phyſicians who brought medicine into Europe, and formed the Salernitan ſchool, chiefly by tranſlating various Arabian and Grecian medical books into Latin. He was born at Carthage; and learned grammar, logic, geography, arithmetic, aſtronomy, and natural philoſophy, of the Chaldees, Arabians, Perſians, Saracens, Egyptians, and Indians, in the ſchool of Bagdad. Being thus completely accompliſhed in theſe ſciences, after thirty-nine years' ſtudy, he returned into Africa, where an attempt was formed againſt his life. Conſtantine, having fortunately diſcovered this deſign, privately took ſhip, and came to Salerno in Italy, where he lurked ſome time in diſguiſe; but he was recogniſed by the caliph's brother, then at Salerno, who recommended him as a ſcholar, univerſally ſkilled in the learning of all nations, to the notice of Robert duke of Normandy. Robert entertained him with the higheſt marks of reſpect; and Conſtantine, by the advice of his patron, retired to the monaſtery of Caſſino, where, being kindly received by the abbot Deſiderius, he tranſlated in that learned ſociety the books abovementioned, moſt of which he firſt imported into Europe. Theſe verſions are ſaid to be ſtill extant. He flouriſhed about 1086. Petr. Diacon. de vir. illuſtr. Monaſt. Caſſin. cap. xxiii. [28] Methodius was biſhop of Olympus, Patara, and Tyre, and wrote in Greek, Queſtions on Geneſis, Bodl. 2016; Hymns to the Virgin, Bodl. 76. 234. 2500. Jerom tranſlated ſome of his works; and ſome were printed by Allatius. His tract "de fine ſeculi & revelationis," Rom. 1656, may be a prophetic piece.

[29] "Evangelium Nicodemi de paſſione & reſurrectione Chriſti" is in the Bodleian library, 1113. Other copies there bear the title of "Geſta Salvatoris."

[30] "B. Auguſtini epiſtola ad Cyrillum de obitu S. Hieronymi, preſbyteri, cum reſponſis." Bodl. 778. In N° 1220. it is "de magnificentiâ Hieronymi;" and in 1390. "de laude Hieronymi."

[6] Biſhop Repyndon, who was abbot here, gave to his church of Lincoln a book called Peter de Aureolis (a breviary of the Bible) after the death of one of his prebendaries: which book is now in the Britiſh Muſeum. MSS. Reg. 8 G. fol. 111. Warton, I. Diſſertation II. p. 80. The newer library of Lincoln cathedral, built by dean Honeywood at the cloſe of the laſt century, has ſuperſeded the uſe of the older, ſo that the few MSS. left in it were in total diſorder when I viſited it, 1791. Among theſe, however, were ſome which had been given by Hugh archdeacon of Leyceſter about 1151, when Haimo Chancellor of Lincoln had the care of the library. On two of theſe ("Hegeſippus," and "Decreta Gratiani") was written, "Ex dono Hugonis archid. Leyceſtr'."—Mr. Warton's obſervation on the royal library at Paris in the beginning of the fourteenth century (I. Diſſ. II. b 2.) will apply to this of Leiceſter abbey. "There were only four claſſics in the royal library. Theſe were one copy of Cicero, Ovid, Lucan, and Boethius. The reſt were chiefly books of devotion, which included but few of the fathers; many treatiſes of aſtrology, geometry, chiromancy, and medicine, originally written in Arabic, and tranſlated into Latin and French: pandects, chronicles, and romances. This collection was principally made by Charles the Fifth, who began his reign in 1365. This monarch was paſſionately fond of reading, and it was the faſhion to ſend him preſents of books from every part of the kingdom of France."

[7] He was afterwards abbot.

From this Catalogue it ſeems to be rather doubtful, whether in the library of this religious houſe there might be any one complete collection of all the Holy Scriptures. Suppoſing Biblie, in the firſt article, to have included both the Old and the New Teſtaments [1], it was a tome defective and worn, (defect' & uſitat'). The ſecond conſiſted of each book of the Old Teſtament only; and the third of the Goſpels, without any mention of the Acts of the Apoſtles, of the Epiſtles, or of the Apocalypſe. There is, however, a ſeparate mention of "Actus Aptor' gloſſ'," "Apocalypſ' gloſſ'," "Eple Pauli [2] gloſſ'," "Eple Canonice;" and among the laſt occurs the "Canticus Canticorum." Perhaps there might be ſome of theſe Auguſtine monks, to whom the divine oracles in the learned languages would have been of little uſe; and yet to theſe was not indulged a tranſlation in Engliſh, there being in the Conſiſtorial Acts at Rocheſter the minutes of a rigid proceſs againſt the precentor of the priory of that cathedral for retaining an Engliſh Teſtament in diſobedience to the general injunction of Cardinal Wolſey to deliver up theſe prohibited books to the biſhops of the reſpective dioceſes.

Knighton, a canon of St. Mary le Pre, has, to his own diſgrace, recorded his bitter condemnation of the tranſlation made by his contemporary Wicliff (X Scr. col. 2644.): "Chriſt intruſted his Goſpel," ſays that eccleſiaſtic, "to the clergy and doctors of the church, to miniſter it to the laity, and weaker ſort, according to their exigences and ſeveral occaſions: but this Maſter John Wicliff, by tranſlating it, has made it vulgar, and has laid it more open to the laity, and even to women, who can read, than it uſed to be to the moſt learned of the clergy, and thoſe of the beſt underſtanding; and thus the Goſpel Jewel, the Evangelical feaſt, is thrown about, and trodden under feet of ſwine." Such language, as an ingenious and learned Divine has juſtly obſerved, was looked upon as good reaſoning by the clergy of that day, who ſaw not with what ſatire it was edged againſt themſelves [3].

"A. 1528, Jan. 15. In palatio Roffenſ', coram ipſo reverendo patre, comparuit perſonalitèr Dr. Will. Mafelde, monachus & precentor in eccleſ' Caſtr' Roffenſ', notatus, quod, poſt publicationem factam in civitate predictâ quòd unuſquiſque ſancta Dei Evangelia in idioma noſtrum tranſlata apud ſe ſervand' eidem reverendo patri inferrent, & traderent, ſub pœnis in literis reverendi patris cardinalis contentis, idem Wills̃ hujuſmodi libros poſt tempus per eundē rev' patrē limitat' apud ſe ſervavit & retinuit," &c.

[1] There is very little reaſon to doubt that Biblia was a general name for MS copies of both Teſtaments, as well as for printed ones afterwards, from the firſt publication to the preſent time.

[2] No other of the Epiſtles in the New Teſtament occur, ſave thoſe of St. Paul.

P. 294. It has juſtly been lamented, that no drawing has been preſerved, nor any deſcription given of the ſtyle of the building, of Leiceſter Abbey; that only excepted which is given at the top of Plate XVII. fig. a. But ſir William Manners, owner of the ſite of Leiceſter abbey, having lately let the grounds within the walls of that place to a gardener, and alſo converted a portion of the Counteſs of Devon's manſion into a dwelling for him, and the remains of the ruin having in conſequence been much explored, ſeveral foundations of the original Abbey have been diſcovered; with the leaden ſeal to a bull of Pope Alexander III. engraved under the portrait of Cardinal Wolſey in Plate XVII. The ſtyle of the windows may alſo now be aſcertained. Amidſt a quantity of rubbiſh which had obviouſly been buried at the building of the late manſion, Mr. Throſby deſcried, March 13, 1797, many fragments of the windows; and, by a nice inſpection, and putting the mutilated parts of ſome of them together, they form the figure engraved in Plate XVII. fig. b. Two or three other fragments, like that in fig. c. (2½ inches round) lay among the rubbiſh abovementioned. And many fragments like fig. d. (4 inches round) were found within the walls of that part of the building lately pulled down, all evidently from the old Abbey.

An ornamented niche from the Abbey-wall, which undoubtedly once held an image of the Virgin Mary, is alſo ſhewn in fig. e; and in fig. f. the door-way, with the blank ſhield, noticed in p. 293.

Ibid. Six acres of freehold meadow-land in the Abbey Meadow were advertized for ſale, in March 1798, being then let to Mr. James Hardy, tenant at will, at £25. a year.

P. 330. In 1379, the rectory of Craneſley in Northamptonſhire was appropriated to the collegiate church of the Newark [9]; and the dean and canons continued regularly to preſent an incumbent to that vicarage till 1530, when Thomas Harryſon was preſented by Francis Cave, Roger Gyllot, &c. under a grant from the members of the collegiate church [10].

P. 331. William Waleſby was, in 1434, a canon of Hereford, and prebendary of Morton Parva; which he exchanged, in 1437, for the rectory of Church Langton; and in 1440 again exchanged his rectory for a canonry and prebend at Hereford.

our Saviour, ſitting on either ſide of it: and there one of the ſaid monks roſe, and went a pretty ſpace from it, ſitting down upon his knees, with his ſhoes put off, crept upon his knees unto the ſaid croſs, and kiſſed it; and after him the other monk did ſo likewiſe."—The offerings under the denomination of pes crucis, at the church of St. Martin's in Leiceſter, were at that time very large; and as large were the receipts per year by means of the cheſt or box termed pixis dominicalis. But, according to Ecton, in Liber Valorum, the clear yearly value of the vicarage was, at the beginning of this century, only £9. 13*s*. 7½*d*. And from whom has the modern vicar the diet of a canon for himſelf, the allowance of proviſion and of pence for his deacon or curate, and a loaf for his ſervant, to make him as contented with his ſtation as his predeceſſors were ſaid to be while the abbot and his canons poſſeſſed the appropriation? P. 212. The patient industry of Mr. Joseph Strutt having considerably enlarged and corrected the Montfort Pedigree, his copy of it is here inserted:

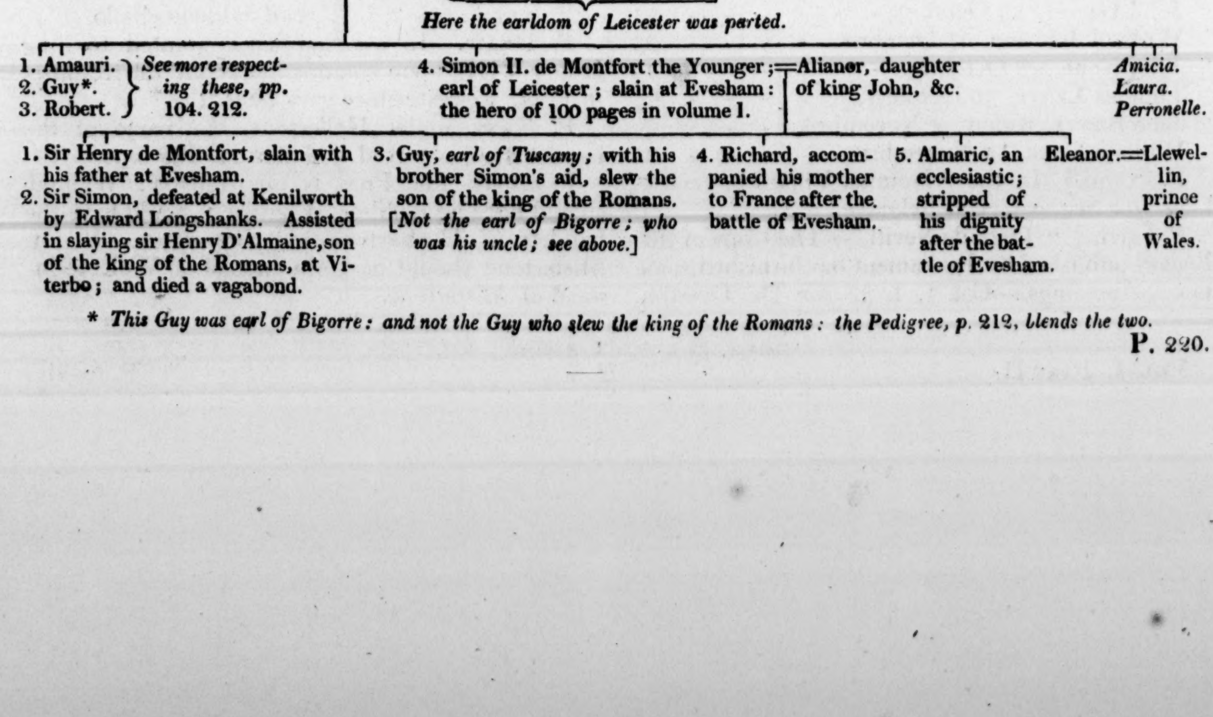
PEDIGREE of MONTFORT EARL of LEICESTER.



Robert king of France, died 1031.
Union of the Bellomonts and Montforts.
Robert Blanchmaines, third of the Bellomonts earls of Leicester.
Petronilla.
Almaric, a base son, builder of Montfort, in France.
Simon de Montfort, earl of Evreux in right of his wife.
Bertha, daughter and heir of Richard earl of Evreux, and constable.
Simon de Montfort II. surnamed the Bald; count of Rochfort and Evreux.
(His wife is omitted in Pedigree, p. 212, and placed to his son: hence much confusion. But page 90 compared with 99 will set all right.)
1. Amicia; married into the Montfort family (though not, as in Pedigree, p. 212, to the earl of Leicester, the first: she was his mother.) In the Pedigree, p. 212, this lady is joined with her son in the matrimonial line; and at p. 259 she is made the daughter of her brother Fitz-Parnell.
2. Margaret; married Sayer de Quincey. At p. 259, this lady is called the daughter of Fitz-Parnell: but was his sister.
1. William de Britolio.
3. Roger, bishop elect.
4. William?
2. Robert Fitz-Parnell; left no issue. (He was the fourth and last Bellomont.)
Loretta; died a nun.
Here the earldom of Leicester was parted.
1. Amauri.
2. Guy*.
3. Robert.
See more respecting these, pp. 104. 212.
4. Simon II. de Montfort the Younger; earl of Leicester; slain at Evesham: the hero of 100 pages in volume I.
Alianor, daughter of king John, &c.
Amicia.
Laura.
Perronelle.
1. Sir Henry de Montfort, slain with his father at Evesham.
2. Sir Simon, defeated at Kenilworth by Edward Longshanks. Assisted in slaying sir Henry D'Almaine, son of the king of the Romans, at Viterbo; and died a vagabond.
3. Guy, earl of Tuscany; with his brother Simon's aid, slew the son of the king of the Romans. [Not the earl of Bigorre; who was his uncle; see above.]
4. Richard, accompanied his mother to France after the battle of Evesham.
5. Almaric, an ecclesiastic; stripped of his dignity after the battle of Evesham.
Eleanor.
Llewellin, prince of Wales.

* This Guy was earl of Bigorre: and not the Guy who slew the king of the Romans: the Pedigree, p. 212, blends the two.

P. 311. add to Vicars of St. Mary de Castro, William Croftes, M. A. Oct. 8, 1638, by lapse.

Ibid. l. ult. The Rev. Thomas Robinson, Vicar of St. Mary's, died March 24, 1813, in his 64th year. He was seized with an apoplectic fit whilst shaving, after which he never spoke. Mr. Robinson was as much distinguished for his zeal and ability in performing his pastoral duties, as for his piety, benevolence, and virtues, in private life. On the morning of Sunday, March 21, he visited the different gaols as Chaplain, and in the evening delivered an animated and eloquent discourse from James v. 9. "Behold the Judge standeth before the door." The 7th of March was the 39th anniversary of his ministry in Leicester. He had been Vicar of St. Mary's 34 years, and, as an Evangelical Minister, had long classed among the most popular Preachers of the age. The different public charities (of many of which he was the founder) have in him lost one of their warmest friends and most able advocates, and the town of Leicester will have just reason to regret his death.—An immense concourse of spectators attended his interment, which took place on March 29th. 14 Clergymen preceded the funeral procession, and every avenue to the church was crowded to excess; but, notwithstanding the great pressure, the strictest solemnity and silence prevailed throughout the whole ceremony[1].—Mr. Robinson was formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, B. A. 1772; M. A. 1775. Besides the works, already noticed in p. 311, he published, "The Christian System unfolded; or Essays on the Doctrines and Du-

[1] The following character of Mr. Robinson is extracted from "The Pulpit," a recent biographical publication: "Remotely retired from popular observation, read without being heard, I have now to describe a Preacher who is known more by his writings than his sermons; or, I should say, rather by his printed than his spoken discourses. I am almost fearful of not doing justice to him. I wish that those who read what he writes, could hear him as he speaks. Thomas Robinson, formerly Fellow of Trinity College in Cambridge, and now Vicar of St. Mary's Church in Leicester, is a native of Yorkshire. He is married, and has several children. Nearly thirty years has this able Divine continued to minister in the vicarage he now holds; unwilling, as

'Unskilful he to fawn or seek for pow'r,
By doctrines fashion'd to the varying hour!'

'Perhaps,' observes Mr. Robinson, in the Preface to his Scripture Characters, 'after all the controversial writings with which the world abounds, the important purposes of Religion will be more effectually promoted by solemn and earnest exhortations, grounded on acknowledged principles, than by the most ingenious and solid arguments in vindication even of the purest Creed. The latter, indeed, may be highly useful, as conveying light to the understanding, and conviction to the judgment; but the former, in general, have a more powerful influence upon the will and the affections, and are therefore more conducive to practice.' Nothing can be truer than this principle in preaching! and it is the principle by which Mr. Robinson generally conducts himself in the pulpit. Instead of labouring to establish the propriety of certain axioms, first truths, he assumes them as fundamentally ascertained, and proceeds ties of Christianity," 3 vols.: "Prophecies on the Messiah;" a Visitation Sermon, published by request; and "A Sermon, preached in London, 1808, before the Society for Missions to Africa and the East, promoted by Members of the Established Church," &c.—An elegant monument, by Bacon, will shortly be erected to the memory of Mr. Robinson in St. Mary's church.

Ibid. Add to note ³: "The Rev. William Ludlam left two sons. The eldest, Thomas Ludlam, esq. died at Sierra Leone, July 25, 1810, on board the Crocodile frigate, in the 35th year of his age. He had been appointed by his Majesty a Commissioner for special purposes on that Coast. The premature death of this excellent young man was not only a subject of sincere lamentation to his numerous friends, but was in some degree a national loss. Inheriting no small portion of his father's natural talent for scientific pursuits, and cultivated by a sound classical education, his first views in life were turned to the liberal profession of a Printer; and in that capacity I gladly bear testimony to the excellence of his conduct during a regular apprenticeship. Gentle and unassuming in his manners, and industrious in his habits of business, his conduct gave general satisfaction both to his equals and his superiors. Soon after the expiration of his apprenticeship, an opportunity occurred, which was thought favourable both to his health and future fortune, of entering into the service of the Sierra Leone Company; and in that infant Colony he was for some time one of the Council, and at length became Governor. On the Colony being taken into the hands of the Administration, a new Governor was appointed by the Crown; but Mr. Ludlam obtained an especial commission, with power to visit such parts of the coast of Africa as might be thought useful to the interests of Great Britain and the general cause of Humanity; a commission for which, by his mild conciliatory manners, and by the experience acquired during a long residence at Sierra Leone, he was most eminently qualified. But his bodily strength was not equal to the task he had undertaken; and he fell a victim to disease, originally arising from a weak constitution; but with the pleasing consolation, both to himself and his surviving friends, that his life, though not a long one, was wholly passed in endeavours to be useful to all mankind.—The following tribute of respect (inscribed on his monument by his affectionate mother) was the joint production of the late Henry Thornton, esq. M. P. for Southwark, Thomas Babington, esq. M. P. for Leicester, and Zachary Macaulay, esq.:

"Sacred to the memory of Thomas Ludlam, esq. during many years Governor of Sierra Leone, and afterwards one of his Majesty's Commissioners for examining into the state of the British Settlements on the Coast of Africa, for the purpose of rendering them subservient to the civilization of that continent.—To his zeal in the pursuit of this object he fell a victim on the 25th of June, 1810, aged 34 years.—In the execution of the important and arduous services to which he was called, he manifested superior talents and intelligence, singular moderation and firmness, unshaken integrity, and a disinterestedness and modesty which adorned all his other qualities.—His unwearied and judicious labours to promote the best interests of the natives of Africa, will not be forgotten by the friends of that deeply-injured race, and entitle him to a distinguished place among their benefactors. His life was short; but in that short life he did much for God and man.—The foundation of all his virtues, was a stedfast faith in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. This impelled him to engage in occupations which promised extensive usefulness, supported him under various difficulties and dangers, consoled him in seasons of sickness, and cheered him in the hour of death.—His widowed mother has erected this monument as a token of gratitude to God for having vouchsafed to her the gift of such a son, whose filial piety was most exemplary; who, while he lived, was a blessing and comfort to her declining years, and whom she humbly hopes again to meet at the resurrection of the just.'"

Mr. William Ludlam, youngest son of the Rev. William Ludlam, died April 1, 1813. He was in the high path of professional eminence, and deservedly esteemed in public and private life, as a very able, honourable, and upright man. He left an aged mother, and a widow and young family, to lament his loss.

ceeds to enforce and apply them to the cases of his hearers. Intelligible in his illustrations, forcible in his applications, and animated in his exhortations, there is no portion of his audience, however different as to intellectual attainments, uninformed or unimproved. While he fills the rich with good things, the poor are not sent empty away. Bred in the good old school, he knows that no sermon is properly concluded, edifying though it prove to the believer, without admonishing the unbeliever and alarming the transgressor. Here he is great. His 'life,' as Gregory Nazianzen said of Basil, being 'lightning,' and his word thunder, his remonstrances, and his admonitious are delivered with the energy of apostolic eloquence. If there be any fault in his voice, it is its sounding loudness, the tremendous clapping, rather than the tempered rolling, of the thunder. Admirable is his animation. Though somewhat advanced in years, and not exempt from the inroads of age, no sooner is he in the pulpit than he becomes the new man; 'renews his strength,' and, as it were, 'mounts upward!' His eyes beam with the light of life; his soul gives motion to his frame; and, as he draws near the end of his Sermon, he seems rising from the pulpit to glory. Sensible of the influence of his conduct on others, and perhaps from higher views, Mr. Robinson takes part in the Psalmody of his congregation. 'I can testify,' declares Augustus Toplady, in his Short Memorials of himself, 'by sweet and repeated experience, that singing is an ordinance of God, and a means of grace. Lord!' he adds, 'fit my soul to bear a part in that song, for ever new, which the elect angels, and saints made perfect in glory, are now singing before the Throne and before the Lamb.' Excepting some few notes of heads, which he now and then looks to, Mr. Robinson preaches extempore. If he brings with him the skeleton of his discourse, he trusts for its living substance to the breath which can breathe on the dry bones of this earth! Some of his pulpit prayers are also delivered extemporary, with great judiciousness, and true efficaciousness. Having mentioned his use of head-notes in preaching, I must glance at a circumstance connected with them. Whenever his voice fails, which, notwithstanding its powerfulness, it is found to do, this failure is particularly perceptible when, as his sight is not now good, he lowers his head towards his cushion, in order to peruse his notes. These notes are contained between the leaves of his large Pulpit Bible. What, however, are defects like this, spots in the sun, when we look at the merits of such a man? His appearance is venerably fine; his dressing, as well as his preaching, being quite of the old school. It might seem superfluous to add, what yet it may be right to add, that the people flock to his church. He also is a great popular preacher, and he also is a good parish priest. Leicester ought to be thankful for, I must not say proud of, the present Vicar of St. Mary."

"Jan. 28th, 1651.

"Leicester.—Upon the peticon of the Maior and Justices of the Borough of Leicester, in the County of Leicester; setting forth, that there are five antient parish churches in the said Borough, and the maintenance belonging to them is not one hundred pounds a yeare; and praying this Committee, for a competent additionall maintenance to be setled upon able Ministers sutable to the numerousnes and pouerty of the people there; and upon due consideracon of the great usefulnes of able Ministers in such populous places, whereby the Gospell may be the better propagated; It is resolued by the Committee, that the yearly sume of twenty-foure pounds ten shillings, going out of the Prebend of Margaret's in Leicester, and soe much more as will make the said twenty-foure pounds ten shillings a yeare the yearly sume of two hundred pounds, be granted and paid by the Trustees for maintenance of Ministers out of the said Prebend, and other the accrewing rents and revenues in them vested, for increase of maintenance to such godly and able Ministers, as shall officiate in the said Churches within the said Towne, and be approued by this Committee. And it is ordered, that the Maior and Common Councill of Leicester be desired to consider how the same may be fitly distributed among such Ministers; And whether any of the said Churches may not conveniently be united, and to certify the same to this Committee with all convenient speed, that such union may be thereupon made by authority of Parliament, and the said augmentacon of two hundred pounds a yeare may be setled accordingly.

His first effort was a Translation of Mr. Burke's pamphlet on the French Revolution, which he rendered with very little depreciation of its elegance. After that time he wrote several small pieces against the Revolution; and had been so often at Coblentz, that he was stigmatized by the name of "The Coblentz Writer."

Ibid. col. 2, l. 13. Mr. Alderman John Eames, of Leicester, died Feb. 25, 1811. He served the office of Mayor in 1790, and his magistracy was distinguished by a degree of independence and public spirit, never excelled, and seldom equalled. During his mayoralty, a thorough investigation took place throughout the town in weights and measures, and more than a waggon load of the latter were publicly cut up in the market place by the town servants.

Obituary of respectable Individuals of Leicester:

Mr. Alderman Watts died Nov. 28, 1803, in his 76th year. Early in life he quitted the tillage of the field for the field of glory; and, during the American war, was sent to Canada, in which province he remained 12 years, and was engaged in several pitched battles; was at the taking of Quebec, and in the field when the gallant General Wolfe fell. On his return to this country he took a public-house, and, by perseverance and industry as a brewer, acquired handsome property with strict honour and integrity. His widow died August 3, 1806.

Mrs. Linwood died at Leicester, Dec. 28, 1804. During the course of a long life she performed the various duties of a Christian with exemplary piety, and in the exercise of practical benevolence. The genuine purity of her mind, the active kindness of her disposition, and the warm philanthropy of her heart, had long endeared her to a large domestic circle, and to a numerous acquaintance. She was mother of the incomparably-ingenious Artist whose performances in needle-work have been so justly and universally admired; see p. 123.

Mr. Alderman Price died Jan. 10, 1807, in his 84th year. Courteous in disposition, warm in affection, and ardent in friendship; the great object of his life was usefulness; and the grand spring of all his actions religion.

Mr. John Ireland, printer, of Leicester, died April 17, 1810; he was strictly independent in his principles, of great probity, and much esteemed.
